FIRMLY RESOLVED

THERE IS NO BETTER TIME FOR our Health & Fitness issue than January, perfectly aligning with New Year's resolutions. My 2018 goals range from diet-related to finance-related: Reubens or milkshakes? No. Bitcoins or Blockchain? Possibly. And 2018 arrives after a blockbuster year for our cover subject, Eliza Shirazi, who took home our Boston's Best Fitness Guru award in 2017 and expanded her self-described fempire with 120 instructors. In this issue, Jonathan Soroff chats with her about the downside of hitting the gym, her friendship with George Foreman III and her plans for nationwide expansion.

Meanwhile, Soroff also tackles his sleep disorder, while our Improper staff solicits advice from fitness freaks on how to take your workout to the next level. In the Imperatives section, Nathan Tavares is energized by a few new products hitting local shelves, Cathryn Haight checks in with a new fitness center in Back Bay, and Julia Aparicio rounds up some workout class and booze combos. I guess it's break one resolution (#DryJanuary) to keep another (working on them abs). At least there'll always be that Bitcoin investment—or not, according to Ezra Dyer. Read on to find out.

NATURAL INSTINCTS

THREE NUTRITION COMPANIES SAVOR SCIENCE AND SUPPLEMENTS

Going Supplemental

How's that resolution about eating better and working out more going? Yeah, we're sure you're really going to nail it this time. But if you need a little help, there are three Boston nutrition companies that made waves in 2017 and will help keep you on course throughout 2018. Put down the pre-workout powders and artificially sweetened snacks and prepare to rev up, refuel and recover with these all-natural supplements. / Nathan Tavares

For a cinnamon latte recipe with WarmUp High-Protein Coffee, go to improper.com.

Rev up with WarmUp High-Protein Coffee

Before his instant-coffee-meets-protein supplement hit Amazon two months ago, James Testa had a rough entry into the nutrition industry. While recouping from a motorcycle accident, he was percolating on ways to up his protein intake and boost his energy before workouts. WarmUp High-Protein Coffee does both with powdered espresso and 15 grams of whey protein per serving. "It's the only protein powder currently in my space that's not using any types of artificial ingredients or sweeteners," Testa says. Since it tastes like a cup of black coffee instead of a dairy-heavy shake, add it to a mug of hot water for a protein-packed morning Joe.

WHAT'S THE BUZZ: For pre-workout energy, add 1 scoop to 10 ounces of cold water, stir and enjoy about 15 minutes before your gym sesh.

$28 per 1-pound package // warmupnutrition.com

Refuel with IQ Bar

Will Nitze, who launched the nutrition company IQ Bar in October after studying neuroscience and psychology at Harvard, knows that wolfing down a sugar-bomb granola bar when the 3 pm snack monster growls is a surefire way to summon a mental crash. "IQ Bars are the first and only nutrition bars optimized for the brain," Nitze says. "Whereas 99 percent of bars are high-carb and low-fat, IQ Bars are low in net carbs, high in healthy fats, and packed with five brain-critical nutrients." Choose between almond cacao, blueberry walnut or matcha hazelnut flavors on the company's website.

MEET YOUR MATCHA: "I centered one bar on matcha and hazelnuts because they are incredibly rich in flavonoids and vitamin E respectively, two compounds shown to benefit the brain."

$3 each or $32 for a 12-pack // eatiqbar.com

Recover with Tart Cherry

Cam Fischer and Alfred Schofield, the founders of plant-based nutrition company VitalFit, want to help you focus on recovery. As Fischer was healing from a back injury, he switched from stomach-torching ibuprofen to tart cherry juice since the polyphenol-powerhouse fruit is a natural anti-inflammatory agent. The downside? The juice's caloric and sugar content. That's why the Tart Cherry capsules—which the company introduced in April and says will help boost recovery and reduce muscle soreness—contain extract made from dehydrated cherry skins. Says Fischer, "The skins are not only the most nutrient-dense part of the fruit, they're sugar and calorie free."

PICK-ME-UP: "We source our tart cherries from a sustainable, grower-owned co-op in Northern Michigan, where they're grown, picked and dehydrated."

Widowmaker has hosted yoga classes since it first opened in September, but its Zumba class on Jan. 20 ($25), led by instructor Saran Cartullo in the tap room, will be a first for the Braintree brewery.

TROPIC LIKE IT'S HOT

A TIKI CONCEPT BRINGS A HEAT WAVE TO THE FINANCIAL DISTRICT

TIKI ROCK BAR
2 Broad St., Boston
(617-670-0107) tikirock.com

Christopher Straub worked for years helping open high-end properties for Hyatt Hotels in cities such as New York, Chicago and Washington D.C., but his first foray as a restaurateur is a stark departure from those previous gigs. The Financial District's just-opened Tiki Rock Bar has a laid-back vibe to go along with a full entertainment license.

"I always wanted to open a place of my own," Straub says. "Same quality food and cocktails, but more approachable and friendly. Tiki kind of hit that on the head."

Taking up residence in part of the space formally inhabited by the Place nightclub—the other half is occupied by Moe Kuroki's Oisa Ramen—Straub's venture pays ode to Tiki bars of days' past—with some elevated updates. The restaurant taps chef de cuisine Matt McPherson of South End Buttery and Porto and sushi chef Minggan "Tony" Wu to create a Japanese- and Polynesian-inspired menu that features shared appetizers, large plates and sushi. Some of Straub's favorites include steak skewers made with grass-fed beef, black garlic teriyaki, blistered cherry tomatoes and soy bruleed onions as well as a ginger-soy fried chicken dish served with a cabbage pancake, pickled chilis, bonito, bean sprouts, Kewpie mayo and okonomiyaki sauce. The five specialty sushi rolls include the Dragon's Breath, stuffed with king salmon, lobster salad, avocado and then lit on fire.

The bar program, spearheaded by beverage director Charlie Smedile—formerly of Clio, Waypoint and Uni—will serve traditional Tiki cocktails with innovative twists and over-the-top garnishes, such as the ScRumdiddlyRumptious made with a house rum blend, Aperol, strawberries, long peppers, coconut cream and lemon.

The dining room seats nearly 100, including a 32-seat bar and a lounge area with luxurious leather couches, and the space also includes a stage for live music. Port holes with hand-painted underwater scenes adorn the walls and an installation of bleached seashells courtesy of Cape Cod adds to the oasis Straub sought to create.

"I wanted people in the office buildings around here to be able to step out of work at the end of the day and come to a place that they feel like is outside of Boston," he says. "That's kind of the idea—to distract people and let them unwind."

Good Eats: Duck Tale

Before you decide that vanilla belongs nowhere near savory dishes, take a bite of the duck confit taco at Yellow Door Taqueria. "I like using sweet ingredients in unexpected, savory ways," chef Colton Coburn-Wood says of the dish, which also features plantain strings, crema, cilantro, pickled red onions and a chamomile vanilla plantain puree. The Baja-meets-Boston restaurant, which opened in July, is the latest venture from Brian O'Donnell and Dropkick Murphys' frontman Ken Casey, who helm several area eateries, including the neighboring Lower Mills Tavern. Coburn-Wood's love of duck confit inspired this rendition, but the puree is the shining star. The hint of sweetness mellows the zing of the onions and is all the proof you need that vanilla is anything but boring. / Nathan Tavares

Drink of the Moment
ZIO

PRICE: $13

INGREDIENTS: Nolet's gin, Italicus, Aperol, grapefruit, egg white, olive oil, orange bitters, sage

TASTE: "It sounds sweet, but there's a bitterness to it," says Sulmona co-owner Carmelo Bari, who recommends this off-the-menu special for flip and fizz fanatics. There's froth from the egg white plus floral notes and hints of orange from Italicus—a recently revived favorite aperitif of the royal Medici family

SAY UNCLE: You'll also detect a bit of silkiness thanks to the addition of an organic, unfiltered olive oil that's from a small batch produced by chef Delio Susi's Sicilian uncle Guy—hence, the cocktail's Italian name. "They very rarely send it over to the United States unless it's family," Bari explains. "The general public in the U.S. probably won't see it anywhere." Here you'll find just a few drops, though Susi usually reserves it for topping select dishes like his uncle's favorite, cioppino, and diners can also get a taste beginning in February when the Kendall Square eatery launches its Polenta Parties, during which the garlic- and crispy sausage-topped grain will be served on custom maple planks at the Farmer's Table.

PAIR IT WITH: The hearty, herb-filled porchetta ($26). At Sulmona, the Abruzzo staple's pork belly is slow-roasted for 13 hours.

WATCH OUT FOR: The forthcoming cucumber-infused gin and tonic that's served with a bottle of the extra-carbonated Q tonic water (made with quinine from bark grown in the Andes) so that customers can add their own bubbles a la the European custom. / Soroh Hogmon

Q&A AWKWARD FITS

Boston comedian Bethany Van Delft is set to celebrate cringeworthy social screw-ups with Starstruck: Close Encounters of the Awkward Kind. The new comedy show with co-host Nick Chambers features seat-squirming stories of people meeting their idols. We chatted with Van Delft before the Jan. 17 show at the Rockwell. / Nothon Tovores

WHAT FIRST GOT YOU INTO COMEDY?
I don't think I considered that I could do comedy until I saw Soturdoy Night Live for the first time. But I had really soul-crushing stage fright. So it was an extremely long journey to get to the place where I could actually stand up, on stage, in front of people, without fainting or vomiting. [Laughs.]

HOW DID YOU CONQUER YOUR STAGE FRIGHT? This is ridiculous, but I modeled for a long time. When the opportunity came up, I saw it as a great opportunity to work on my stage fright. ... I would already be this canvas for these fantastic artists and all I had to do was not faint. Like, stand up, walk down a runway and make it back so everybody could see all the work everybody put into it.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE THE SHOW?
The show is comedians and storytellers telling stories about a time that they met a celebrity, or an idol of theirs, or someone they had a massive crush on or a mentor—basically someone they hold in extremely high esteem. And then they absolutely blow it. Which is 100-percent the story of my life. ... The other cool thing about the show is that the audience chooses their favorite story and that story is acted out by our sketch group called the Redo Crew. It's the same story that the storyteller told but it's in favor of the teller. ... The stories have been fantastic and hilarious and awkward, but the redo has been such an extra added bonus.

Bully Boy Barre at Bully Boy Distillers

Instructor Sara Steele-Rogers leads this barre-inspired class in Bully Boy Distillers' barrel room on Jan. 28 ($12). Who says the movies are dead? Boston more than doubled its cinemas in the past two months, adding the Showplace ICON in the Seaport (which officially opens on Feb. 8 following its soft opening) and an AMC theater in South Bay Center. The Showplace ICON theater aims for an upscale audience, with nighttime age restrictions as well as a rule that prevents customers from entering once the movie begins, while the AMC theater follows the chain's mainstream rules. We sized up the two spots for cinephiles, so the only choice you'll have is between Phantom Thread and The Last Jedi. /Matt Martinelli

FIT WITH FLAIR

Tired of the crammed, corporate feel of other gyms, Bill Najam strove to create a club atmosphere with his latest venture. Lynx Fitness Club, which opened earlier this month at the Park Plaza hotel, spans 19,155 square feet but caps its membership at 1,200. That means fewer sweaty people standing too close while waiting for the treadmill. "Our goal is to create a safe and cool environment where members can hang out, work out and have some fun," co-founder/CEO Najam says of the space that boasts brick accent walls and hardwood floors. The workout wonderland includes fitness features such as an oversized turf area equipped with sleds, ropes and TRX bands, Peloton bikes for members to use during on-demand spin sessions and two group fitness studios for classes such as HIIT, boxing, yoga and barre. Lynx is also home to New England's only Topgolf Swing Suite for virtual practice on courses around the world, with the option to play a round or take regular lessons with PGA professional Rob Hardy—so you can hit the links year-round. / Cathryn Haight

FEMINIST FOOTPRINTS

A NEW BIOGRAPHY PUTS A FEMALE MOUNTAIN CLIMBER ON A PEDESTAL

A Woman's Place Is at the Top* by Hannah Kimberley
Published by St. Martin's Press, 347 pages, $27

THE FAME HAS FADED FOR FANTASTIC mountain climber Annie Smith Peck, born in Providence in 1850, but Hannah Kimberley's biography, A Woman's Place Is at the Top, brings Peck to life using her diaries and letters, timely honoring her progressive spirit. Boldly defying her New England parents, and fighting against discriminations she faced as a woman—only her brothers were encouraged to go to college—Peck pursued dangerous and stimulating climbs all over the world.

One of the first women to climb the Matterhorn, she did so wearing forbidden pants instead of a skirt. On mountains where others had died, and one where a fellow climber's frostbite led to hand and leg amputations, Peck ventured on despite nearly being "cut in half" by a rope. While reaching dazzling heights, she was often competing with sly, sometimes dishonest men and women. Peck was always headstrong and frequently contemptuous of male climbers, and her letters show an arch and witty outlook as well as an appreciation of nature's beauty alongside its exacting scientific dimensions.

Peck's notoriety and firsthand knowledge led her to become an expert on U.S.-South American relations, while she became an activist at home. Suffragist blood coursed through her veins as she marched with 10,000 people in 1912 and she even threw her weight behind various politicians including presidential candidate Woodrow Wilson. Kimberley, a Gloucester resident, wisely crafts Peck's exhilarating historical story—one that still resonates in 2018.

FROM PAGE 101: With her stories and stereopticon slides to illustrate them, Annie took her audiences through the "vivid perils and magnificent views, and hung them over chasms of unknown depth where a few inches more of slipping would have meant farewell to earth's pleasant scenes." Finally, she would rest them at last on "the majestic, rugged, and nearly perpendicular Matterhorn." ◆

Travel / Sarah Hagman

DESERT COURSE

GET LOST IN THE ART OF WEST TEXAS

BUCKLE UP WHEN YOU TOUCH DOWN IN El Paso: It's just the beginning of the journey. To head to Marfa, Texas, a tiny arts town with a big reputation, you're going to need a tank of gas, a very long playlist and a pocketful of cash—there's only two or three ATMs to be found in a place with fewer than 2,000 residents and just one stoplight.

After a Border Patrol check, change in time zones and a couple hours on the road, the first sign you're in for some culture is in Valentine, where you'll come across the oft-Instagrammed Prada Marfa installation that's occupied this small spot on Route 90 since 2005. Travel another 35 miles and you'll find yourself at Ballroom Marfa, the nonprofit behind the faux storefront that's filled with the fashion brand's real but untouchable shoes and handbags. Here, the organization hosts film screenings as well as visual and performing arts events, but there's plenty of gallery galavanting beyond this converted dancehall to fill your visit, from the Ayn Foundation to Inde/Jacobs. A must-see, however, is the contemporary art museum founded in 1979 by the man who put this arts mecca on the map. Donald Judd's Chinati Foundation sits in a former air base that now houses large-scale installations from fellow minimalist artists, including fluorescent fanatic Dan Flavin's untitled project that spans six buildings.

There's more grounds to roam at the 21-acre El Cosmico, where campsites and yurts mix with teepees whose flaps reveal leather loveseats and queen beds with heated mattresses. (Beware that between November and March, desert temperatures significantly drop, meaning the pipes in the communal bathhouse can freeze—we said it would be an adventure.) For some small luxuries like heat, air conditioning and a private shower, book one of the rainbow-bright vintage trailers filled with locally made toiletries, cooking supplies and other necessities. Outside, swing solo on a hammock or mingle with friendly strangers around a fire after grabbing beer and wine in the lobby's lounge, the only place on site to find a Wi-Fi signal. Also check the calendar for special events, such as the first-Saturday-of-the-month Cosmic Karaoke sessions complete with tacos, micheladas and tunes under the night sky. Amateur singers take a back seat during the fall's annual Trans-Pecos Festival of Music + Love, which most recently brought Wilco and a St. Vincent-backed Fiona Apple to four days of workshops—from welding and screenprinting to yoga—plus baseball games, pancake breakfasts and pig roasts.

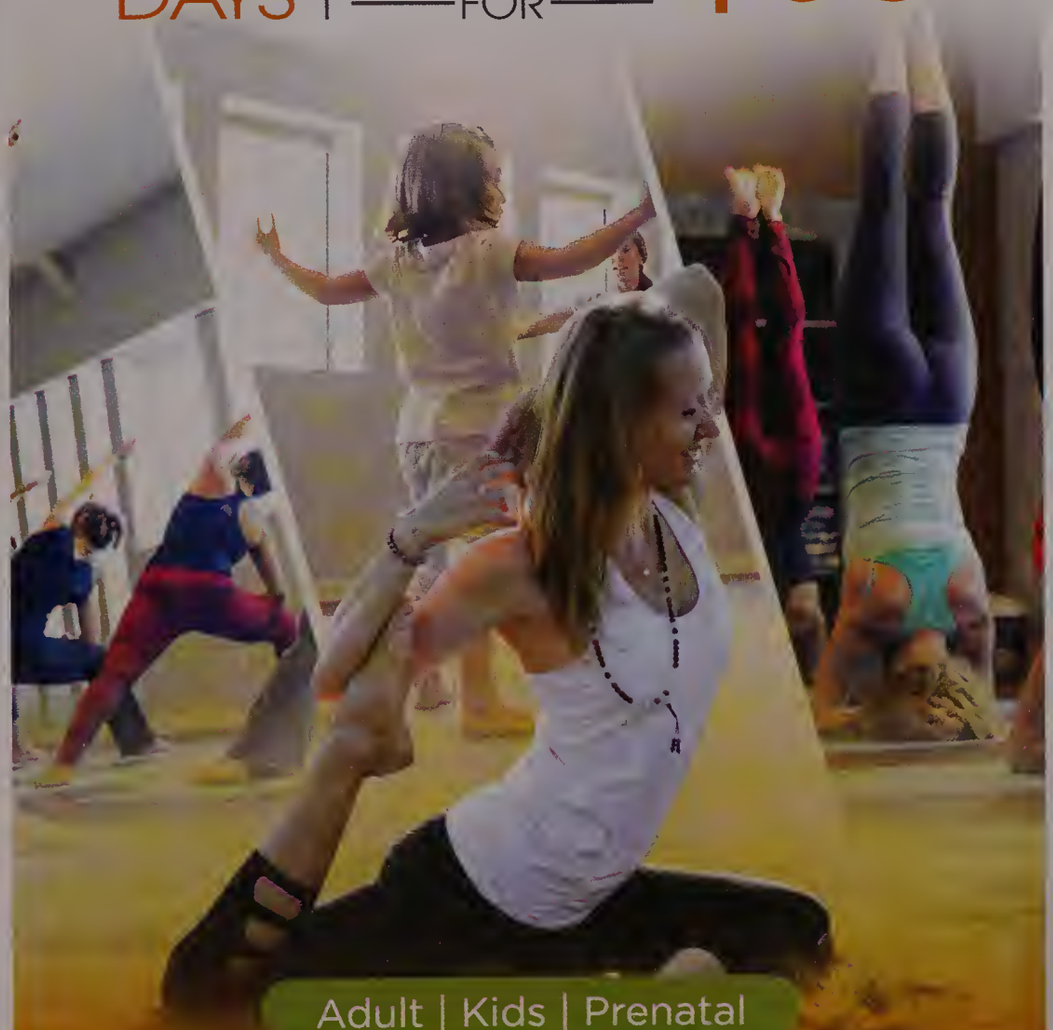
Down the road, the live music continues on Tuesday nights at Bar Saint George, a swanky lounge nestled in El Cosmico's sister property that opened in 2016 after a major update to a hotel that railroad workers and traveling ranchers flocked to till the Great Depression. Filled with contemporary works from abstract painter Jeff Elrod, Boston-born Christopher Wool and other artists with connections to Marfa, the industrial space is home to 55 rooms with Australian sheepskin rugs, Aesop products and views of mountains and plateaus—a plush option for those looking to be surrounded by four firm walls come nightfall.

When the temps rise, bibliophiles can cool off in the well-curated bookstore followed by a dip in the pool, and during the bar's happy hour, fill up on small plates and $2 draft beers and $5 martinis. Those with a bigger appetite can head to LaVenture, the French- and Italian-flecked American restaurant that's open seven days a week—a first for Marfa, which largely shuts down on Mondays and Tuesdays, and is otherwise known for fickle operating hours—and offers a wine menu packed with small and family-owned vintners.

Other fine-dining experiences await at Cochineal, whose backyard vegetables star in dishes like a mushroom souffle and simmered tomatoes, and the Thunderbird Hotel's Capri, which will have you plotting a living room redesign as you sip on hibiscus margaritas and make your way through Texan cheeses. Seek out unpretentious nightcaps at local watering holes like Planet Marfa, a beer garden with pingpong, darts and a small but rowdy dance floor, while pool sharks can opt for Lost Horse Saloon, helmed by a tall, eye-patch-wearing fellow. Come morning, get your coffee buzz on at Do Your Thing, which serves a mean drip coffee not to mention house-made sourdough topped with deliciousness like ripe tomatoes, cream cheese and poppy seeds, or wander over to Frama, a cafe next to a laundromat that whips up inventive homemade ice cream to sample over a round of Scrabble.



You'll want another sweet souvenir to remind you of your time out west. At Moonlight Gemstones, jeweler Paul Graybeal will set one of his collected agates into a bracelet for you, and at Cobra Rock Boot Company, wannabe cowgirls and boys can check out the American leather line of Chelsea and desert boots. Pick up a painted horseshoe that'll easily slip into your carry-on at Cast + Crew, or if you're planning on putting down some roots, opt for the dreamy midcentury hoop chair. When you round the corner to browse Marfa Brands' essential oils-packed soaps, you can ask owner Ginger Griffice for advice. Like many others, the New York photog set out on a vacation more than a decade ago and never looked back. ◆

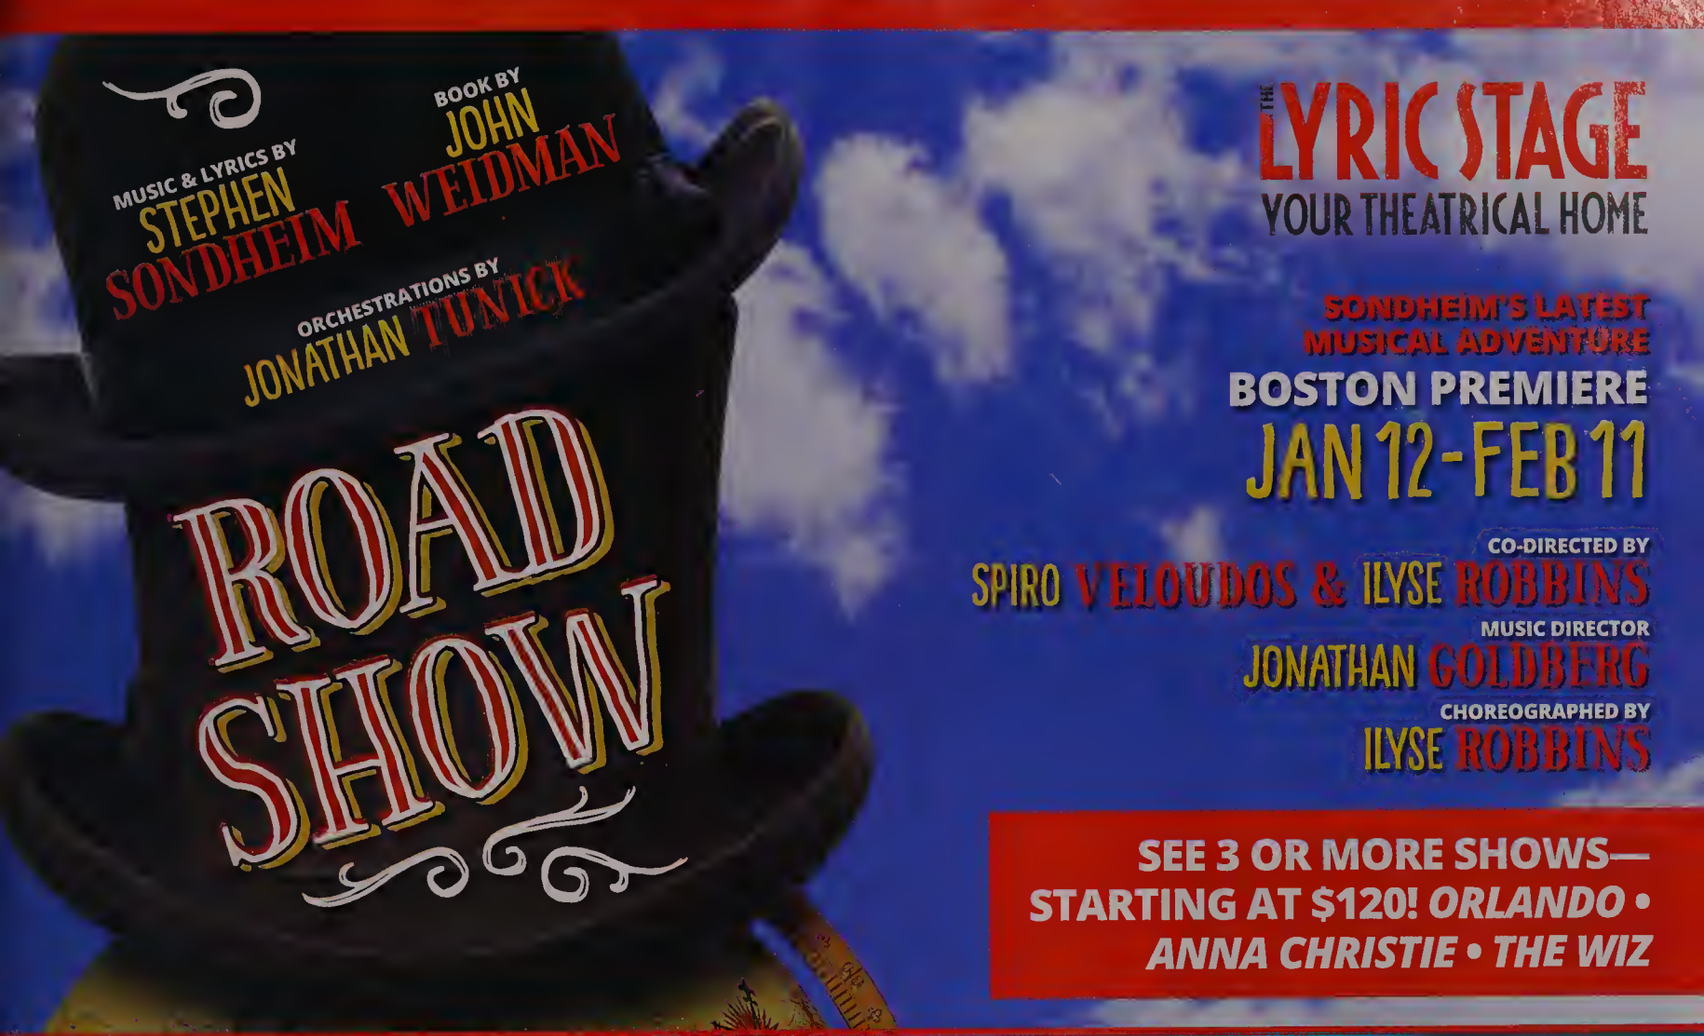
HELLO, FUDDUH

THE KALEIDOSCOPIC FLAVORS OF MODERN ISRAELI CUISINE GLITTER AT OUR FATHERS

LONG-SUFFERING FANS OF TRADITIONAL Jewish deli caught a break in 2016 when Mamaleh's opened in Cambridge, finally getting a quality local fix of Ashkenazi staples like corned beef and knishes and lox. The new Our Fathers Deli in Lower Allston (from the folks behind the Franklin Cafe, Citizen Public House and Tasty Burger chain) adds a worthy takeout entry to this genre: Locals can drop by all day for Reubens, roast chickens and bagels and coffee to go. But what's happening at the adjacent Our Fathers Restaurant & Bar is rather more novel. There, chef de cuisine Jameson Poll serves up the locally-even-scarcer cuisine of modern Israel, which bolsters Central European tropes with ethnic Jewish flavors from North Africa, Iberia and the Middle East. Showering his work with fresh herbs, globe-trotting spice blends, magenta sumac and crushed nuts, Poll's plates are rarely less than eye-catching, and his flavors are frequently sensational.

You'll notice, for instance, that a Yemenite version of matzo ball soup ($5/$7) is brightly adorned with fresh dill, and underneath its hefty, slightly dense dumpling in a golden, murky broth is many little chunks of carrot, celery and chicken. A pastrami sandwich ($13), its generous pile of beef cut into thick oblongs, is nicely fatty, gets oomph from a cardamom/coriander crust and zippy deli mustard, and is served in extraordinarily fragrant rye bread. Things get less familiar and more compelling as Poll strays into Sephardic and Mizrahi territory. There's much delectable grazing to be done among his small plates, many accompanied by giant rounds of a thin, irresistible flatbread with a texture that falls somewhere between pita and a gossamer crepe—fantastic for dipping into spreads like thick, tangy labne ($8) with radishes, or the superb, spice-dusted hummus that accompanies salatim ($12): three wee salads of pickled onions, French Breakfast radishes and savory grated beets.

Middle Eastern staples like chickpea-based falafel ($9), chopped Israeli salad ($9) and spinach bourekas ($12) boast pretty platings and fine accompaniments, like the three dips alongside the bourekas. Charred eggplant ($9) nestled amid eggplant chips is intriguingly dark, texturally fascinating and deeply delicious. Lamb on cinnamon sticks ($12) includes fetching accents of tehina, bright crunchy pomegranate seeds and verdant leaves of mint, but suffers from some aggressive salting. One fat, nicely charred, just-chewy tentacle of octopus ($12) sits atop smoky roasted eggplant puree, a skillful preparation of an often-abused species. Seared chicken livers ($9) bring similar outward char and inner tenderness to their bed of parsnip cream with chunks of green apple, faintly accented with raisins and walnut oil. Larger plates include entrecôte ($25), a precisely pan-roasted rib-eye atop an interesting broccoli/peanut pesto with charred broccoli rabe and a grated horseradish, making for a more piquant-than-average steak plate. Challah-wrapped cod ($22) juicily bakes a big fillet in coconut curry, somehow keeping its topside challah coating crisp for a winsome effect. Shakshuka ($14), a gorgeously smoky, chili-hot, velvety tomato/red pepper sauce in a cast-iron skillet that's dotted with good French feta and barely-cooked eggs to swirl in, is magnificent.



The best of the sides includes tahdig ($6) like a Persian version of socorrat—the crisp bottom layer of paella—heady with the popcorn-fragrant scent of blackened turmeric, cumin and cardamom. Plancha-browned cauliflower steak ($6) offers visual drama and plenty of zip with its emerald-green kale chermoula. Desserts include a dreamy basboosa soak cake ($8), such as a square of syrupy semolina pound cake topped with excellent little wild blueberries in a puddle of crème anglaise.

Bar director Kayla Quigley builds a fascinating beverage program around 90-plus gins, using old-school cocktails and tonics to showcase them. We loved the thyme-adorned New American G&T ($12) as well as foamy classics like the Pink Lady ($13) of gin, applejack, lemon, grenadine and egg white. Non-alcoholic beverages include vivid housemade shrubs and egg creams ($5) as well as a solid assortment of beers (12 drafts, $7-$10; 7 packaged, $4-$11). A list of 31 wines ($32-$149, most under $50, many available by the glass, $9-$14) shows the Franklin Group's neighborhood-restaurant frugality and value. For instance, we found affordable joy in both a South African pinotage from the MAN Family ($32) and the Oregon pinot noir BT Straight Shooter ($44), though vintage listings wouldn't hurt.

With 72 seats, many in comfy banquettes, and 20 more seats at the serpentine bar, the room has the sleek, mid-mod design of a luxe Space Age diner, with its rec-room walnut paneling, Sputnik chandeliers, cubist mural and sparkly bar and tabletops. Service is uniformly friendly, and on at least one occasion impressively demonstrated Job-like patience with an unruly, chaotic family. If you've ever cooked from Yotam Ottolenghi or caught his 2011 BBC documentary, Jerusalem on a Plate, you might already have some sense of the extraordinarily vivid palette, the dizzyingly diverse swath of culinary traditions that Our Fathers Restaurant & Bar is drawing from. Or you could just assemble your own group of noisy friends and start eating your way through the menu. You should—there's nothing like it in the city. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION IS TO TRIM DOWN. NO MATTER HOW MUCH I DIET, THERE ARE BULGES IN CERTAIN AREAS. CAN YOU TELL IF IT IS SAFE TO "FREEZE" THE FAT AWAY?

A: The name of the procedure that freezes away unwanted fat is CoolSculpting. It is an extremely safe and effective non-invasive body contouring treatment with lasting results. The procedure uses controlled cooling to freeze unwanted fat, killing off fat cells which are then naturally eliminated from your body.

Coolsculpting works for any of our problem areas such as our stomach, love handles or saddlebags. Other popular areas to treat are inner and outer thighs, back fat, and double chins. Coolsculpting results in a 20 – 25% reduction of fat without needles, surgery, or downtime. You do not have to exercise or diet to obtain excellent results.

At SkinHealth, our clients have seen remarkable results with CoolSculpting!

HEMMED IN

PAUL THOMAS ANDERSON DELICATELY THREADS THE NEEDLE

Reynolds Woodcock, the fictional couturier played by 60-year-old Daniel Day-Lewis in Paul Thomas Anderson's Phantom Thread, is a man who needs women in his life. While the ghost of his mother, who taught Reynolds his trade, remains close to his heart (thanks to the locks of her hair that he's secretly stitched into the canvas breast of his jacket), it's his slightly older sister Cyril (Lesley Manville) who handles the business end of the House of Woodcock in mid-1950s London. Although he designs the extravagant dresses, Cyril takes care of most of his affairs—sometimes literally, as when she steps in to terminate the short-lived relationships between her hypersensitive younger brother and the live-in companions who briefly serve as his muses.

The latest lovely to wear out her welcome (Camilla Rutherford) is dispatched offscreen and coldly given a dress as a form of severance even before the film's ornate title card appears; hidden in plain sight within the words "Phantom Thread" are Anderson's first and middle initials, a detail that dovetails nicely with Woodcock's signature of sewing secret messages into every garment that he creates, such as the embroidered phrase "never cursed" that he's stitched into the hem of a wedding gown to be worn by a Belgian princess.

As a man ruled by routine, it doesn't take Reynolds long to meet a new paramour, during one of this film's many scenes set during breakfast. Taking Cyril's advice, Reynolds leaves London for a sojourn in their country estate. Before arriving in the Bristol sedan he enjoys driving at dangerously high speeds, he makes a stop, settling down to eat at a small seaside cafe where he catches the eye of a clumsy young waitress, a porcelain-skinned beauty whose face becomes flushed with pink as she trips just after entering his view. Her name is Alma (34-year-old Luxembourgian Vicky Krieps, star of Ingo Haeb's The Chambermaid, a little-seen German film from 2014), which we learn when the Eastern European-accented girl slips a note to "the hungry boy," anticipating his offer to take her to dinner that evening. It's clear that Reynolds has met his match.

If this proves to be true, then the three-time Best Actor winner has gone out on a high note.

When filming wrapped on Phantom Thread's 68-day shoot, Day-Lewis released a statement announcing his retirement from acting. If this proves to be true, then the three-time Best Actor winner has gone out on a high note in a performance that finds him speaking in a voice far closer to his own than we're used to hearing from this most chameleonic of actors, who last portrayed our 16th president in Steven Spielberg's Lincoln.

Here's the real shocker, though: As great as Day-Lewis is in this role, Krieps has done the unfathomable, going toe-to-toe with the Oscar winner in a surprising role that does not go where you expect. This is also a credit to Anderson's exceptional script, which pays homage to the gothic romance of Alfred Hitchcock's Rebecca (1940), from its midcentury glamour to the triangular dynamic of its characters, which also provides a meaty part for Manville.

Beyond the plot, the movie is stunning to both look at and listen to. When cinematographer Robert Elswit (who won an Oscar for shooting Anderson's There Will Be Blood, and who shot all of the director's films, save The Master) proved unavailable, Anderson decided to act as his own uncredited director of photography, aided and abetted by chief lighting technician and longtime gaffer Michael Bauman, camera/steadicam operator Colin Anderson (no relation), first assistant cameraman Erik Brown and grip Jeff Kunkel. One of the few directors still shooting on film, Anderson wanted fine grain that wouldn't be terribly noticeable when he blew his 35mm negative up to 70mm for select presentations (including an engagement at Coolidge Corner Theatre), but he soon came to realize that heavy grain would be how he'd achieve his intentionally flat-looking period effect—the same look he and Bauman developed for a Radiohead music video. And speaking of Radiohead, the band's lead guitarist and keyboardist Jonny Greenwood, Anderson's usual collaborator, writes a score with haunting piano and string cues that immeasurably add to the old Hollywood feel achieved with Anderson's classically shot and framed film.

Ultimately, Phantom Thread is a director/star pairing that we rarely see or hear anymore in a business now dominated by superhero cinema. And there's nothing more heroic than that. ◆

JUPITER RISING

A EUROPEAN OUTSIDER REDEFINES HIS PLACE AS AN ACCLAIMED MUSICAL NOMAD

THE PHRASE "AN ALIEN WITH extraordinary abilities" on Benjamin Clementine's U.S. visa painted an accurate description of the British singer/pianist. But one word in particular caught Clementine's eye and imagination as he mulled a concept for his new album, I Tell a Fly. "The alien is being a foreigner or a wanderer," he says. "I'll take that opportunity to identify and somehow describe the spirit of alienation."

Clementine, 29, spent much of his life as a wanderer familiar with disconnection, from a childhood where he felt more comfortable in the library than around peers to a homeless stint where he literally found his voice busking on the Paris subway.

He wasn't the odds-on favorite to win the 2015 Mercury Prize for the U.K.'s best album, but he did just that with his dramatic, eccentric debut At Least for Now, edging out Florence + the Machine and Jamie xx. Success only galvanized his outsider's resolve. When it came to producing his follow-up, Clementine says, "They've given me the award to be myself. So the only thing I can do is to be myself."

Released last September, I Tell a Fly expands that prospect as a more fleshed-out project whose sweeping shifts suggest a play or opera. "It's an ambitious attempt to write a play, but because I don't have the capacity and the means to make it happen, I decided to just write an album," he says. "My goal is to really write stories rather than sing a bunch of songs."

The album finds Clementine both echoing his own experiences (playfully claiming "Jupiter" as his home) and alluding to the plight of refugees.

"My goal is to really write stories rather than sing a bunch of songs."

"Aliens on foreign land again, better beat it and go back home, 'cause if they find you, they will kill ya!" he sings in "God Save the Jungle," then declares "A less safe place is no safe place at all" in "Better Sorry than Safe," cloaking choral vocals in synthesizer as well as piano. "Phantom of Aleppoville" draws a correlation between bullied children and war-displaced peoples as outlined by psychoanalyst Donald Winnicott.

"If I'm somewhat scared to approach schoolchildren because I think they're laughing at me," says Clementine, who was bullied in his youth, "I think a kid in Aleppo is experiencing something much worse."

Clementine found refuge in a public library on the northern outskirts of London, devouring the works of William Blake, John Locke (notably his "Essay Concerning Human Understanding") and George Orwell. "I found it easier to laugh reading a book than to laugh with people," he says. "I wouldn't even turn up to school."

Music wasn't as strong an influence under the strict Catholic upbringing of his Ghanaian parents. Clementine discovered classical music by age 11, learning to play piano by ear, and was later inspired by Antony and the Johnsons, Nina Simone and composer Erik Satie.

Clementine left his family for Paris with little in his pocket and bounced between a crowded hostel and the street, picking up a guitar to play the Metro (videos can be found on YouTube) and bars. Despite a passionate, booming and lacerating tenor voice that's become his trademark, he never sang before busking to earn money, Clementine says. "I only sang because I had to survive."

A star-making solo turn on the BBC's Later... with Jools Holland, where he performed in a long coat and bare feet, led to a major record deal and wider touring (as well as a cameo on Gorillaz's 2017 track "Hallelujah Money"). Now on an international tour, Clementine brings a band to the Berklee Performance Center on Jan. 30.

"I could not care less if my music doesn't get played on the radio or whatever," he says. "If you're not happy with what you're doing, you're the one that's going to be the least happy." He disputes the idea, however, that his music is an acquired taste. "We live in a time now where apparently we have no time," Clementine says. "When we do slow down, people are going to spend more time looking at resources, listening to music and paying more attention to different art forms. They'll eventually realize that things were not as different as they thought." ◆

COOL ON CASH

NEW KID ON THE BLOCKCHAIN

I DON'T KNOW ABOUT YOU, BUT I'M EXCITED about bitcoin. Everybody should be. It's the currency of the future, man. And it just came out. You probably don't know about it. What's that? You do know about it. Your aunt gave you some for your birthday? In 2014. OK, I get it. I'm late to the party. Once aunts know about stuff, you're late to the party. So forget bitcoin. I'm all about Ethereum now. That's definitely my other favorite cryptocurrency in my Coinbase wallet. Yeah, of course I own more than one kind of cybercoin. Who do you think I am, your aunt? With all due respect to Maureen, I'm an investor, one who has—right this instant—$109.67 just sitting out there on the internet getting more valuable by the second. And then less valuable. No, wait—more valuable? This is fun.

I'll admit that I'm skeptical of cryptocurrency, but then again I also thought Twitter was stupid when that first came out. Sure, I still think Twitter is stupid, but my point is that Dogecoin is worth more than a billion dollars and that one was explicitly started as a joke. So imagine how valuable the non-joke currencies might become. Why, bitcoin is now accepted at merchants all over the city, by which I mean mostly the MIT Coop. As far as I can tell, the main attraction of bitcoin and its ilk is that you can own and trade it (mostly) anonymously and prices are extremely volatile and thus exciting. Cryptocurrency is also supposed to be secure, although about $10 billion in bitcoin is still missing from a hack. And Ethereum had a transaction hacked to the tune of $50 million, which they recovered simply by going back to the point in the electronic ledger where the money was taken and untaking it (you can do that, I guess). Other than that, though, your money is safe. Oh, except for the fact that it might abruptly lose value for any reason at all or no reason whatsoever.

Like, what happens to my bitcoin if the Winklevoss twins decide to cash out? As you may have heard, our favorite lantern-jawed Harvard duplicates parlayed a chunk of their Facebook payout into bitcoin and are now sitting on more than a billion dollars' worth. And I don't know about you, but if the Winklevoss twins are doing something,

TALES OF THE CRYPTO: Investing in bitcoin would have been a smart tip in 2014, but it's time to explore other cryptocurrencies.

I want in. Those guys are so ruthless, they used to be the Winklevoss triplets. So I'm down with what they're down with, unless they're out rowing crew. That's just silly, Winklevosses. With all your bitcoin riches, surely you could afford a nice outboard to power your dork gondola.

While some businesses accept bitcoin payments, it's still not the easiest way to pay for things. And as far as sending money to and fro, there are smoother ways to do that—at least in this country. So the attraction to bitcoin really seems to be bitcoin itself. Back in 2015, you could buy a coin for around $300. In December, the price topped $19,000. Either bitcoin is super inherently awesome or everyone has tulip mania over some imaginary drug-dealer money. But probably not that second thing.

Because I think it's important to diversify my imaginary investments, I split my initial $100 Coinbase deposit between bitcoin and Ethereum. On one hand, nobody seems to accept Ethereum as payment for anything. But on the other, it costs a lot less than bitcoin, so you get more of it to not-pay for things.

From what I understand, Ethereum is a platform, not just a currency. Which means that it's spawning other applications to take advantage of its, uh, whatever it does. For instance, Augur, is "an open-source prediction and forecasting market platform that allows anyone to forecast events and get rewarded for predicting them correctly." I hate to disappoint Augur investors, but that concept's been around for a while. Like when I was a kid my dad had a "prediction and forecasting market platform" called Steve, who would indeed reward him for correctly predicting events. I could tell how my father's event forecasting was working out based on a number of key indicators, such as his attitude toward Wade Boggs. The only differences between their system and Augur is that instead of cryptocurrency, they transferred wads of cash and instead of online, transactions occurred in Steve's apartment while I waited in the car.

Granted, I'm new to this game, but I still don't understand why bitcoin is superior to dollar, dollar bills. Unless you're up to nefarious activities or live in a country with a busted-ass money system, it all just seems like rank speculation. I could probably invent a currency called Boogers and declare that nostril miners can only pick one booger per day and people would go wild for it. In fact, if you want to flick some Boogs in your wallet, let me know. I accept bitcoin, Dogecoin and Ethercum. But I'd really prefer cash. ◆

What Are You Waiting For?

The Dance / John D. Spooner

TRIP OF A LIFETIME

SOUND ADVICE ON DUDE RANCHES, REJECTED CREDIT CARDS AND FINDING A PARTNER

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

My family and I are planning a spring vacation, but there seems to be a difference of opinion on where to go. I like the sun, my wife likes the culture of Europe, and the kids like the mountains and winter sports. Do you know of a place that can satisfy everyone? I suppose we could draw straws for a choice, but someone is bound to be disappointed. I certainly understand everybody having an independent vote, and all the choices are fine, but if your children are below the age of 20, you run the risk of them being bored by the sights in Europe. If they're bored on an expensive vacation, then you and your wife are going to be annoyed to furious. And I'm guessing that not everyone loves to ski, or snowboard, or snowmobile, so someone in your family will be unhappy at some point on a trip to the slopes.

I would suggest—even if you waited until school was over in June and before summer jobs started—to take the family to a dude ranch. There are many to choose from, and at lots of price points. But I would concentrate on Montana or Wyoming. The settings are so spectacular, and everyone in your party will enjoy different activities from karaoke or line dancing to movies after dinner. I took all of my children and grandchildren to The Ranch at Rock Creek in Montana late last spring, and everyone threw themselves into being cowgirls and cowboys for a week. It was the best family vacation any of us have ever taken together. All of us rode trails and meadows on horseback, shot pistols, rifles and shotguns, fly-fished, sketched the scenery—and even panned for gold. Plus, being out all day made us starved at mealtime and allowed us to enjoy deep sleep as well. It was a lifetime adventure, and I would urge any family to give it a whirl. Oh, we even learned how to lasso.

No one will be bored and no one will be annoyed when your children don't appreciate the Mona Lisa.

The other night while eating out with friends, my boyfriend asked for the check and his card was declined. This is the second time it's happened. I am getting worried that he may have financial problems he hasn't told me about, and I think he should be totally open about his finances before we get engaged. I don't want any surprises! He has a good job and drives a nice car, but you never know. Am I out of line to ask for full disclosure? If he's not open with me, I am thinking of snooping on his computer to peek at his bank statements. Well, since you've had this experience twice, it does raise a red flag. If this is a long-term relationship that is headed for marriage, this could be a real trouble sign. By all means, do ask for full disclosure if this remains a recurring theme. You are entitled to get a peek into what might be your future. But do not snoop around—or next month I'll get a question from a young man asking if it's OK for his girlfriend to check his various accounts.

If your children are below the age of 20, you run the risk of them being bored by the sights in Europe.

Marriage can often be an accumulation of grievances on both sides, but it is certainly wise to get advance knowledge of what those grievances are going to be.

As a young guy in my mid-20s, I'm not really sure how to approach women. Is there a road map these days? I don't think there's ever been a road map, even in the Garden of Eden. But in our lives, there are always snakes to ruin our paradise. One big thing about relationships is that forcing it is never going to work. You have to be yourself, not putting on an act, to make a romance really work. Approach others with humor and discuss the passions in your life: hobbies, music, movies and sports. Tell stories when you start conversations. We're all suckers for stories, of childhood, of screw-ups, of adventures. Your person of interest will respond with a personal story, and common threads will ever be. The joy killers—male and female—looking for affront under every rock are never going to be your loving mate. So be honest and respectful. Be yourself. ◆

Soroff On / Eliza Shirazi

TOTAL KNOCKOUT

THE FITNESS GURU SWEATS THE DEETS ON LONG-TERM GOALS, TREADMILLS AND JANE FONDA

ELIZA SHIRAZI, 26, IS THE FITNESS ENTREPRENEUR behind the rapidly expanding Kick It By Eliza brand, a fusion of kickboxing, dance and high-intensity interval training. Born and raised in central Massachusetts, she grew up studying dance and earned her degree at UMass Amherst in 2013. She became a New Balance brand ambassador and was awarded a Boston's Best award last year. Shirazi has certified more than 100 instructors to teach her method, which has gained the attention of publications like Well+Good, Seventeen and SELF.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So, first of all, do you think you could kick my ass?
ELIZA SHIRAZI: I could 100 percent kick your ass, six ways to Sunday.

Ever used your skills in a real fight? I haven't, but don't test me.

Do you have a short temper? I'm patient...but you want to be on my good side.

Thing most people don't realize about kickboxing? Well, specific to Kick It By Eliza, they don't realize that females can really kick ass. So when people take the class, I think they're pleasantly—or maybe unpleasantly—surprised by the intensity of it.

So men are welcome to your classes? Absolutely. There are men in the classes, although it's definitely female-focused. The guys are generally the boyfriends, or the husbands, or the gay friends.

Think you'd do well on Dancing With the Stars? Well, I grew up a dancer, so I'd hope so.

Favorite dance form? Hip-hop, cause I'm really 'hood at heart.

Last time you got a bloody nose kickboxing? [Laughs.] Never. But George Foreman III at Everybody Fights once hit me in the face when we were training together, and I was bruised.

Worst injury you ever had? I broke my arm playing on the monkey bars in kindergarten.

Thing you most hate at the gym? I hate running on the treadmill. Spare me!

Thing that people do at the gym that really just doesn't work? I think the thing that doesn't work in general is just hopping on a machine for hours on end just to break a sweat, without intention.

Do you see people at the gym and think, "They're hurting themselves?" Sometimes in these big box gyms, it's really easy to get lost, and not have specific attention on you by a teacher or a trainer, so it's common.

What is it about Kick It By Eliza that's just ignited? It's truly the community behind it. We call it the Kick It Crew. The class is super social. During the class, there's a lot of partner workouts. We do a lot of socializing after the class. We do a lot of events and hangouts outside the class, and it's about the workout, but it's even more about this community of women.

Who do you picture when you're punching the shit out of a bag? Probably all the dumb ex-boyfriends.

Who's the fitness entrepreneur you most admire? Oooooh! Great question. On a more personal level, George Foreman III has been a really big mentor to me. He's been a really big part of this push with Kick It, but on a celebrity level, I'd say Tracy Anderson or Anna Kaiser.

Is there one you think is totally full of bullshit? I think people find what they want from every kind of workout, so none of it's really bullshit. It's just that the goals are different in different classes.

"The thing that doesn't work in general is just hopping on a machine for hours on end just to break a sweat."

How do you avoid having the workouts become monotonous? The class changes every week or so. We change the exercises and the music, but the structure of the class always stays the same. So if someone's coming to the class, they know that Round 1 is the warmup. Round 2 is focused on squats. Specific rounds have specific aims. But the choreography and the music change to keep it fresh.

What is your New Year's resolution? Well, my general and ongoing resolution is to not be late, because I'm late for everything. I'm trying to take small steps to leave 15 minutes earlier. But on a bigger scale, my goal is to get Kick It to more cities in 2018 and establish new communities.

So how do you get your workout into gyms or studios? It's driven by instructors. If someone wants to get certified to teach the class, they'll come to certification training and then go to the gyms where they work and add it to the group fitness schedule. Most recently, I've been taking on a space at the VIA Seaport Residences. We took over their studio and now we provide all the programming there. We're also slated to open up in a couple more luxury apartment buildings.

Is there a psychological component to this? Absolutely. Kick It is much more than just the workout. Round 13 of the class is always a meditation and restorative round, because I really believe that if you're not working out your mind, you're missing out on a huge chunk of a well-rounded workout. We really focus on getting people to a quieter place mentally, so that they can wind down before they either end their nights or start their days. That's a really, really big part of the class.

So you're 26. Where do you think you'll be in your 40s? I'd like to still have a home base in Boston, but the idea is to certify people internationally within the next couple of years, and have different hubs, like these luxury apartment buildings, as places to have instructors train and teach. So I'd say that by the time I'm in my 40s, I'd like to be more on the business management side of things, watching things flow and develop and create, rather than teaching so much.

Jane Fonda—yea or nay? Yea, definitely! Trailblazer!

How about Jillian Michaels? [Sighs.] Also a trailblazer, but I think she became a little over-commercialized, if that makes sense, although I know I've been saying I want to grow Kick It into something as big as what she has.

How important do you think looks are in your business? Unfortunately, I think looks have appeal to people, but I really believe that your vibe attracts your tribe. And so I think that no matter what you look like, your personality and the expertise you bring will always, in the long run, outweigh any sort of looks.

Do you like classic boxing? I do. I've come to really love it. It's helped me as a student, as a teacher. It's helped me build more technical content. I really enjoy it.

Ever bet on a match? I haven't, but the Everybody Fights crew has dared me to in the past. It's not really my style. ◆

POWER UP!

Four local fitness pros on how to raise your workout to another level in 2018

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF
PHOTOS BY JOSH CAMPBELL

JULIE KELLY'S personal one-two combo combines her two passions: boxing and raising money to fight cancer. As a co-founder of the Boston-based HAYMAKERS FOR HOPE, which has raised nearly $8 million for cancer research and care, Kelly is integral in expanding the company to Denver, where it will host its first fundraiser in June. A cancer survivor, Kelly won the New York City Golden Gloves at 132 pounds in 2009 and 2010. She shares some tips with us on how to pack a stronger punch between the ropes.

+ TRY INTERVAL TRAINING This mimics the high-intensity physical output that you need in the ring. There are so many ways to add intervals into your training such as sprints, bag work and kettlebells.

+ SCHEDULE SPRINTS Warm up for 5 minutes and then start out with your typical pace for 5 minutes. At the 10-minute mark, introduce sprints for 20 seconds, then recover back to your typical pace for 10 seconds before repeating the sprints and recovery seven more times for a total of eight sprints. Cool down for 5 minutes.

+ GET JUMPING Warm up for 5 minutes with a jump rope and add in 20 seconds of high knees or double-unders. Repeat at least eight times, similar to the sprints.

+ HEAD FOR THE HILLS Pick a steep, steep hill that allows for a 2-minute run. Run the hill three times while actively recovering down the hill. Once the three runs get a little easier, add more.

NATE BROSEY, founder of ACTION ATHLETICS, knows what it takes to overcome obstacles. Literally. His obstacle-course gym moved from Newton to an expanded 10,000-square-foot spot in Wellesley last June and features American Ninja Warrior-inspired challenges for adults and kids alike. From the warped wall that athletes sprint up in hopes of snagging the ledge at the top to the angled platforms that fleet-footed would-be ninjas leap from, many of the obstacles demand piston power of the legs. Brosey offers his best set of training tips to defy gravity.

+ BUILD EXPLOSIVE MUSCLE Exercises like squats and deadlifts are crucial to building an explosive "power plant" that will power your jumping machine.

+ FOCUS ON FORM Organizing your muscles into the proper chain will increase overall output. Jumping is a total body exercise, so make sure you stack and discharge with efficient timing.

+ STRETCH IT OUT Flexibility will prevent an injury when you push your muscles to the extremes of their ranges of motion. It will also allow for a faster plyometric response.

+ PRACTICE, PRACTICE, PRACTICE Find things to jump on, over and across. Your brain will better process the task at hand if it has a goal or purpose.

REACH FARTHER

JULIE ERICKSON holds dozens of fitness certifications, but the instructor believes Pilates is the most beneficial training system for everyone. The founder of Boston's ENDURANCE PILATES AND YOGA STUDIO works regularly with professional models and athletes, but the proudest moments of her career come from her time with amputees, including Jeff Bauman and five others injured in the Boston Marathon bombings. She bends our ear on how to improve flexibility.

+ INCREASE YOUR RANGE OF MOTION Because you're sitting or driving for the majority of the day, most people's hip flexors are so tight that you can't fully extend while standing. A safe increase in the range of motion of the hips is fantastic for walking and everyday movement.

+ FLEX YOUR SPINE Twist in the thoracic area and flex and extend in all parts of the spine, but most importantly, find length and not compression in every move.

+ WARM UP PROPERLY Don't just jump into your fitness class. If you didn't walk or run there, definitely get there for the warm-up sequence.

+ CONCENTRATE ON MUSCLES Building the proper muscles to maintain length is the most important part of increasing flexibility. Stretching and strengthening your group of muscles in the chest and shoulders corrects forward head posture, reduces pain in the neck and shoulders and even makes you grow an extra inch.

RUN FASTER

DAN FITZGERALD, co-founder of the HEARTBREAK HILL RUNNING COMPANY and founder/coach of the Heartbreakers running club, has made a career out of his lifelong passion of pounding the pavement. Running for 25 years and coaching for 16, Fitzgerald opened his first running store in the South End in 2009 alongside his Boston College track and field co-captain, Justin Burdon. Fitzgerald gives us some ideas on how to pick up the pace this winter.

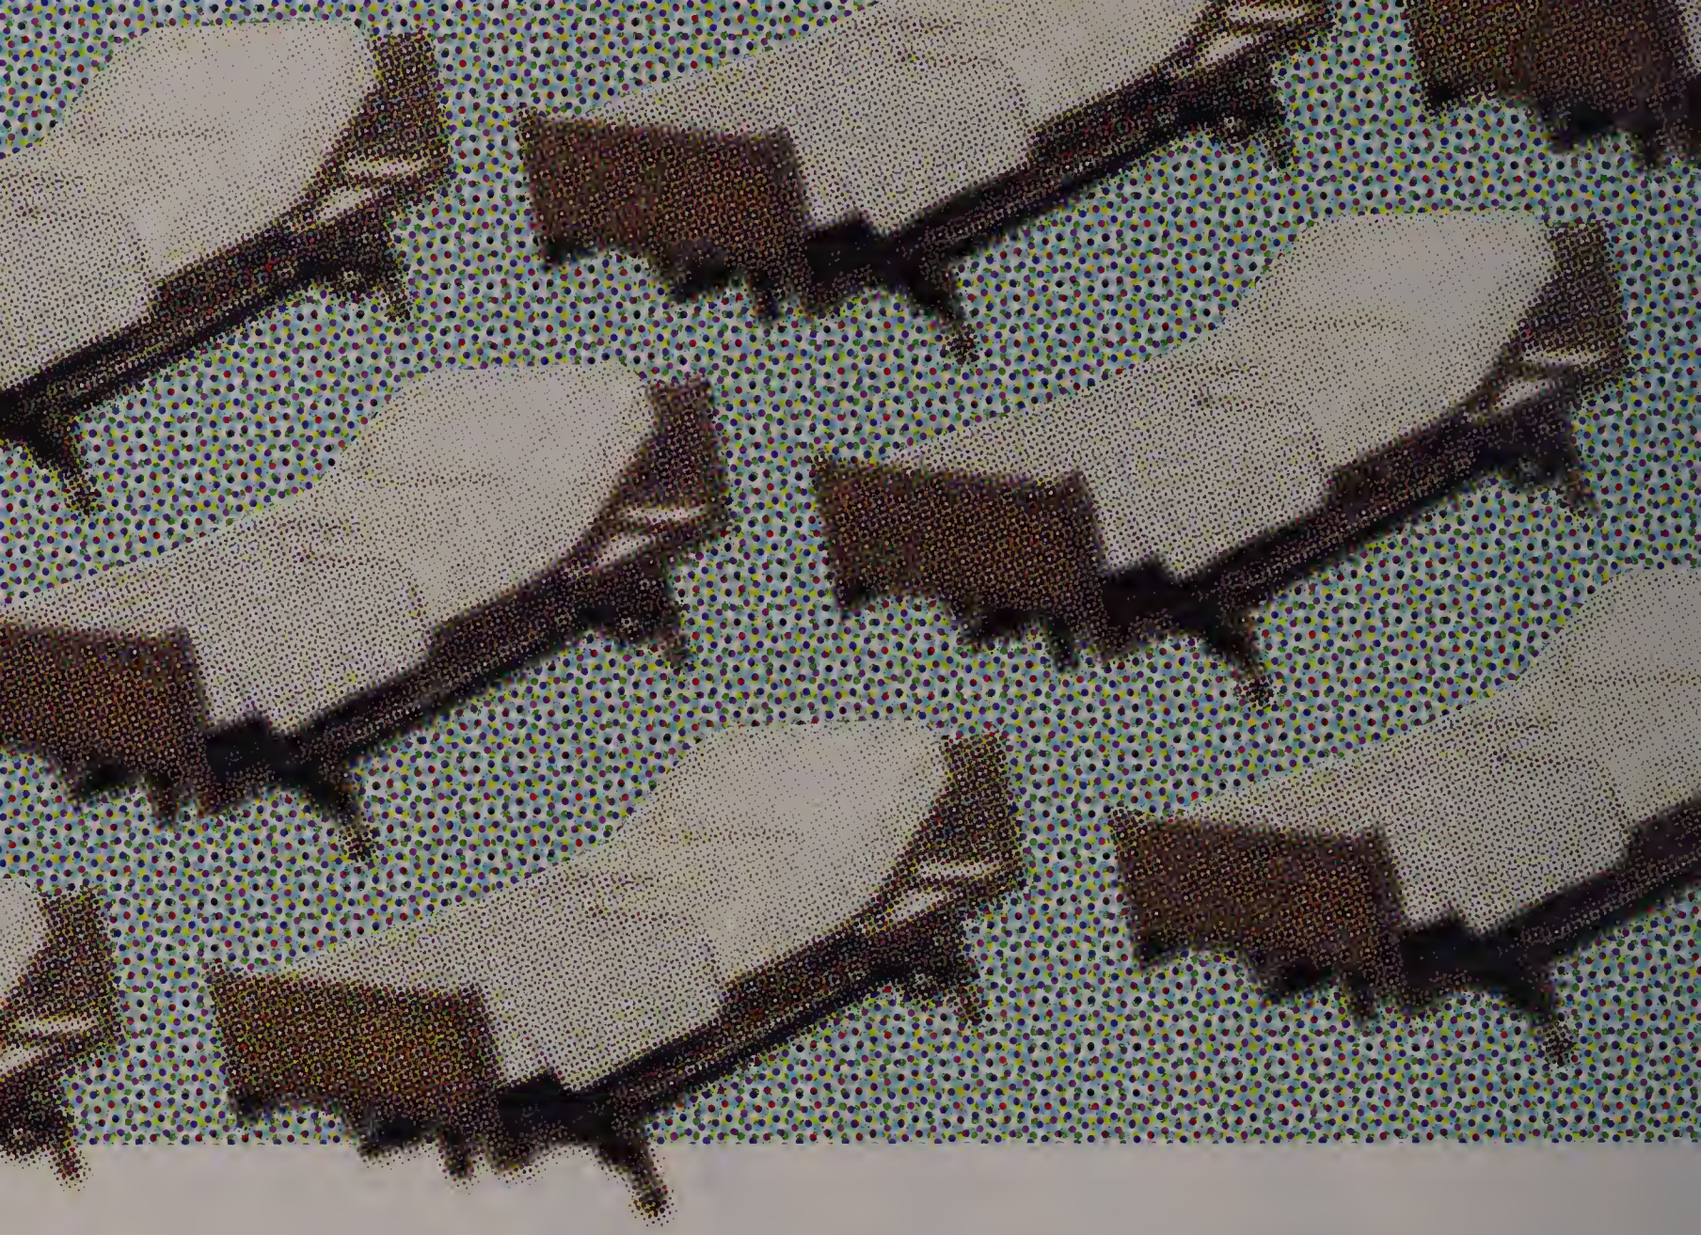
+ ADD STRIDES Post-run strides will help shake off the shuffling pace of your average run—they'll build efficiency, give you an opportunity to feel your best running form over a short distance, teach you to finish with some speed, and finally, it just feels good.

+ DON'T FORGET TO STRENGTH TRAIN It takes more than just running to be a strong runner. There needs to be some baseline strength. Get strong, and the form will follow.

+ GO SLOW This one is counterintuitive—you have to go easy in order to go hard. If your easy days aren't easy enough, you risk not being fully recovered to execute your hard days.

+ JOIN A TEAM When you run with other people, you feed off the group's energy. Once you invest in your own running by committing to a team, you're more likely to show up and hold yourself accountable.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



Over the years, my snoring has been compared to a chainsaw, a howler monkey, the eruption of Krakatoa, and an industrial snowplow throwing off sparks on the asphalt of an interstate in the middle of a snowstorm. I have been relegated to sleeping in the most remote corners of other people's homes, undoubtedly said goodbye to lovers who couldn't deal with the racket, and, in at least one instance, had six rows of a long-haul international flight alternately in hysterics and cursing me. I have tried nasal strips, mouthpieces and numerous other devices to no avail. I now fortunately have a husband who can, for the most part, put up with it, although I am often banished to another bedroom. (For the record: He snores, too.) And I am in the habit of carrying earplugs with me and offering them to anyone I'm spending a night under the same roof with—while simultaneously apologizing in advance.

Thirteen years ago, I found out that I was born with a heart anomaly, which some doctors suspect might have a correlation to sleep apnea. On the advice of my cardiologist, I had a sleep study done at Mass. General. I arrived at the lab and got settled in a charmless, linoleum-tiled room painted a queasy-looking green and equipped only with a standard hospital bed and some intimidating machinery. A technician attached electrodes to my forehead and chest, and I recall asking, "How the hell is anyone expected to go to sleep hooked up to all this crap?" At a bedtime more suitable for a child, I was told to go to sleep, and I tried to get comfortable despite all the wires. Hypnos eventually descended upon me, and I slept relatively soundly, given the circumstances, until some ungodly early hour the next morning. I tapped on the glass at the lab technician who had been monitoring me overnight. She came in.

"So, do I have sleep apnea?" I asked.

"Only the doctor can say for sure," she said, "but one thing I can tell you is that you snore really fucking loudly."

As I later found out from the doctor, I don't have a sleep disorder, unless you count snoring so loudly that a lab technician who routinely monitors other people's sleep felt compelled to resort to profanity in describing mine.

Science has determined that sleep is one of the most important things for our physical health, playing a key role in healing and repairing the heart and blood vessels. Chronic sleep deficiency is linked to an increased risk of heart and kidney disease, high blood pressure, diabetes and stroke. Simply put, sleep is as crucial as eating, but we pay it much less attention, and the quality of our sleep even less. While I, generally speaking, have little trouble getting to sleep, I wanted to try to find ways to catch some better Z's—and, if possible, modulate my nocturnal thundering.

Cue Dr. Stuart Quan, clinical chief and medical director of the Division of Sleep and Circadian Disorders at Brigham and Women's Hospital. His cardinal rule for a good night's rest? "You should use your bedroom only to sleep and do other things that begin with the letter 's'."

Assuming that he isn't referring to "spelunking," I'm in pretty good shape in this regard. Although I am guilty of reading in bed, which helps me feel tired, I've never had a TV in the bedroom, and this, it turns out, is a good thing.

Says Quan, "It's a good idea to avoid screens of any kind, especially ones with blue wavelength light like in smartphones."

That means that even if you rely on your phone as an alarm, it's best to set it and forget it. For me, that meant installing an old-fashioned clock that I could see in the dark. If you are older than 40, I need not explain that the bladder becomes a great interrupter the older you get, and out of curiosity, I always want to know what time it is when I get up to pee. In that case, not blinding myself with my iPhone while I try to find out the time makes it easier to get back to sleep. Similarly, having a night light in the bathroom might be a better choice than subjecting yourself to the full glare of the overhead bulbs.

> "YOU SHOULD USE YOUR BEDROOM ONLY TO SLEEP AND DO OTHER THINGS THAT BEGIN WITH THE LETTER 'S'."

It also turns out that my Jewish grandmother's admonition against eating before bedtime is true. Quan points out that getting vertical too soon after eating can result in acid reflux or heartburn. Obviously, stimulants are to be avoided (no snorting meth before lights out!), but many people don't realize the hidden stimulants in places you wouldn't expect them, like cold medicines that contain phenylephrine. However, the biggest, and most ignored, sleep disruptor is alcohol.

"People have been taught to believe that drinking will help them sleep because it initially makes them feel tired," Quan says. "But actually, it fragments your sleep architecture," which means that that nightcap messes with your REM cycles, and the result is less restful, productive sleep. While obviously apocryphal, I noticed that when I heeded this bit of Quan's advice, not only did I wake up feeling more refreshed (and not hungover), but I felt that my dreams were more vivid, and I remembered them in greater detail. To me at least, that's worth a night off the sauce.

In 2012, The Fiscal Times estimated that the sleep industry was a $32.4 billion a year business, and it's only grown since then. In the past month, Bedgear announced a partnership with the Boston Celtics, becoming the team's "Official Performance Sleep System Partner." The company provides custom mattresses, pillows, sheets and blankets, as well as neck pillows for traveling. This means that the Celtics are now in a love-triangle with the Red Sox, who became Bedgear's "Official Performance Bedding Partner" in 2016, leaving little doubt that pro athletes, whose sole concern is high performance, believe in these technologies. Meanwhile, Framingham-based audio giant Bose recently launched a sold-out Indiegogo campaign for "noise-masking sleepbuds," which cancel unwanted noise and replace it with soothing sounds. While still in the prototype stage, the buds should be on the market early this year.

When asked what he thinks of all the new sleep technology, Quan demurs with the understandable comment: "I don't recommend any of those products you see on TV, because I don't know that any of them have any scientific basis to support their claims."

So what, ultimately, are Quan's top three tips for getting a good night's sleep? Fairly simple: "One, ensure you have enough time to sleep, which for adults is at least seven hours. Two, try to have a fairly regular sleeping schedule, because the data shows that regularity is important in sleep quality. And three, don't go to bed until you're tired."

As for my snoring, he had little solace to offer.

"There are some remedial things you can do, and some you can't. Smoking, allergies and being overweight increase snoring, and those you can do something about. Being male and getting older? Not much you can do."

So it looks like my husband and anybody else I share a roof with is out of luck—at least until Bose comes out with those sleepbuds. In the meantime, you can probably find me in the guest room. ◆

Skip the slopes in Southie this winter

TO SKI, OR TO APRÈS SKI—that is the question. Enjoy the perks of a cozy mountain getaway at Publico, where a slopes-themed pop-up takes over the restaurant's atrium. Under a new retractable roof, the Lodge's winter wonderland is complete with fire pits, flannel blankets and an artificial snow machine. Not ready to take on the shot skis? Warm up to other seasonal beverages like hot buttered rum, hot chocolate spiked with Grey Goose and Aztec chocolate bitters and executive chef Keenan Langlois' lodge-inspired offerings such as a grilled Vermont "shreddar" cheese sandwich served with tomato soup. And food and drink isn't the only thing on the menu: The Lodge will host special events throughout the season, such as lift ticket giveaways and screenings of the 2018 Winter Olympics. Leave your skis behind and enjoy the ride at Publico through March. / Julia Aparicio

FOUND IN TRANSLATION

Fusing poetry and movement, Brodsky/Baryshnikov is a multi-layered translation and a letter to a lost loved one, starring ballet icon Mikhail Baryshnikov performing the works of the late Nobel laureate Joseph Brodsky. Performed in Russian with English surtitles across the top of the set's weathered glass solarium-type room, this theatrical piece celebrates the haunting work of the poet, who immigrated to America in the 1970s after he was imprisoned and eventually exiled from his native Russia because his poetry was deemed "anti-Soviet." Baryshnikov balances stillness and motion—at times reading from a book standing in stark light, other times twisting his body in time with a recording of Brodsky reading his own work. Discover the Russian connection when Brodsky/Baryshnikov illuminates the Cutler Majestic Theatre on Jan. 17-21. / Nathan Tavares

THE POST ★★★ Steven Spielberg takes a crack at staging a star-driven, newspaper yarn like His Girl Friday, setting it mostly during 1971 and populating it with actors like Meryl Streep and Tom Hanks. Streep plays Washington Post owner and publisher Katharine Graham as she prepares the paper for a public offering she hopes will strengthen the publication in its quest for national prominence; the Watergate scandal that made the paper's reputation had yet to break, but executive editor Bill Bradlee (Hanks, who's good, but not as good as Jason Robards in All the President's Men) sensed a big story was cooking at The New York Times. And indeed, the Grey Lady was about to break the Pentagon Papers: 7,000 unnumbered documents commissioned by Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara (Bruce Greenwood) exposing a massive government cover-up. The papers had been smuggled out of the Rand Corporation in Santa Monica by defense analyst Daniel Ellsberg (Matthew Rhys of FX's The Americans), an old friend of Post editor Ben Bagdikian (Better Call Saul's Bob Odenkirk), who's able to get a copy of the papers after the Times is blocked by a federal court injunction from continuing its own reports. Risking their careers—as well as potential jail time—Graham and Bradlee have to decide whether to push ahead and publish their own version of the biggest story in the nation. Ever the showman, Spielberg's not working in a subtle gear here—and he's not helped by a script that could use a few more drafts—but it's hard to think of a movie that's more of the moment than this one. ALL THE MONEY IN THE WORLD ★★★

It's impossible to write about All the Money in the World, Ridley Scott's second film this year (after May's Alien: Covenant), without mentioning the behind-the-scenes drama that unfolded in the 11th hour before the picture's release. As originally shot and completed, this fictionalized account of events surrounding the kidnapping of 16-year-old John Paul Getty III (Charlie Plummer) featured Kevin Spacey as the teenager's billionaire grandfather. When serious sexual allegations destroyed Spacey's career, Scott made the unprecedented decision to recast Getty Sr. with 88-year-old pro Christopher Plummer (unrelated to his young co-star), reshoot scenes originally shot more than 6 months ago in a scant nine days and then recut the picture—all in less than a month. When this news broke, I presumed that Getty Sr. wouldn't be in many scenes. I guessed wrong. Approximately 400 new shots featuring the elder

Plummer were required, with the bulk of the audio having to be captured on set (and recorded at the same fidelity as the original material if the new and old sound was to merge properly). Obviously, none of this was an easy task, but the octogenarian actor and director both pulled it off, grounded by exceptional work by Michelle Williams, who's the heart of the film playing young Getty III's mother. Alas, if only someone could have removed Mark Wahlberg as former CIA man and negotiator Fletcher Chase, who engages in more of the fabricated heroics the actor is making a career of tastelessly injecting into historical-based tales. (At Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Call Me by Your Name ★★★★ Actor Timothée Chalamet made an indelible impression in Greta Gerwig's Lady Bird as a nonchalant young preener mixed up with Saoirse Ronan's titular heroine. He may have been too cool for school in Gerwig's triumph, but based on his tentative, internalized work in Call Me by Your Name, the latest romantic masterpiece from Italian filmmaker Luca Guadagnino (2009's I Am Love), it's clear that Chalamet possesses amazing range, and is poised to join Ronan as a breakout star. Based on the acclaimed novel by André Aciman (wonderfully adapted by James Ivory) and set amid the lush green countryside of northern Italy in the summer of 1983, Chalamet plays 17-year-old Elio Perlman. The multilingual musical prodigy enjoys spending lazy days at the Mediterranean cottage of his parents—Annella (Amira Casar), an Italian translator, and Lyle (movingly played by Michael Stuhlbarg), an American archaeology professor specializing in Greco-Roman sculpture—until he forms a fast friendship with Oliver (The Social Network's Armie Hammer), a chiseled and charming American grad student who arrives on the scene to work on his doctorate, helping out as Lyle's live-in intern. Friendship soon blooms into hormonal infatuation, however, and the two forge a deeper bond that will shape the lad's life. Non-judgmental and keenly observed, it's another of the year's best films. (At Kendall Square.)

Hostiles ★★★ Director Scott Cooper has a knack for getting good work from his performers, whether it's Johnny Depp inhabiting Whitey Bulger in Black Mass, or Jeff Bridges strumming his way toward an Oscar in Crazy Heart. But for the most part, Cooper's films have not been that memorable from a narrative standpoint. The same was true for 2013's Out of the Furnace, his overwrought drama drawn from spare parts of The Deer Hunter. But with his reteaming with one of that film's stars, Christian Bale, he's come the closest to hitting the target of the American mythology he's been aiming for. It helps that Hostiles, a Western based on an unproduced manuscript by the late Donald E. Stewart (a writer on Paramount's first three Jack Ryan pictures), features a compelling story. Set in 1892, the tale focuses on Capt. Joseph J. Blocker (Bale), a haunted soldier who's seen (and taken part in) too much bloodshed. Harboring a deep hatred for Native Americans, the reluctant Blocker nevertheless agrees to escort a former enemy, cancer-stricken Cheyenne war chief Yellow Hawk (Dances with Wolves' Wes Studi) and his family (Adam Beach, Q'orianka Kilcher and Xavier Horsechief) from New Mexico's Fort Berringer to the plains of Montana, where he can die on his tribal lands. The perilous journey sees a tremendous amount of death, as they pick up a shellshocked war widow (Rosamund Pike) and fend off hostile Comanche. It may not be Unforgiven, but that's a forgivable sin in this better-than-expected drama. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle ★★★ Jake Kasdan's sequel to 1995's Jumanji seems about 20 years too late, especially after the untimely passing of that film's star, Robin Williams, a few years ago. But rather than a direct continuation, Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle is more of a reboot. Rather than catch up with Kirsten Dunst's Judy Shepherd or Bonnie Hunt's Sarah Whittle, we're introduced to an entirely new cast of high school-aged characters—nerdy video gamer Spencer (Alex Wolff), football player Fridge (Ser'Darius Blain), shy wallflower Martha (Morgan Turner) and self-possessed beauty Bethany (Madison Iseman)—each who end up in detention, which is where they encounter a dust-covered copy of Jumanji. No longer a board game, writer and illustrator Chris Van Allsburg's creation has been transformed into a '90s-era video game. When they select their characters after booting up the 16-bit cartridge, they're transported to a magical, deadly jungle that looks a lot like Hawaii—only they inhabit new bodies, which is where the film derives much of its humor. Spencer has been transformed into a muscle-bound adventurer played by Dwayne Johnson, Fridge is now a much shorter (and hyper) zoologist played by Kevin Hart, Martha is a Lara Croft-like badass played by Karen Gillan and Bethany has become, well, Jack Black. A little body-swapping goes a long way as our heroes must learn to work together if they're to survive the deadly game before losing the last of their three lives. Lacking the surrealist highs of the original, it's nevertheless a pleasant diversion. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect 3 ★★1/2 More of a cartoon than its predecessors, and with considerably lower stakes, the third and supposedly final Pitch Perfect picks up with the Barden Bellas as they aimlessly drift through post-college life. Series star Beca (one-time Oscar nominee Anna Kendrick, who needs a better agent) isn't satisfied as a music producer, so she quits her dream job to rejoin her old a cappella group on a reunion tour through Europe after the father of Aubrey (Anna Camp), a military brat, finds them a spot on a USO tour. It turns out the Bellas are back to their competitive ways, since the tour is doubling as a contest to find a new opening act for DJ Khaled, who plays himself. No one in the Bellas seems particularly interested in winning, though—especially Fat Amy (Rebel Wilson, still a comic highlight), who wanders off for much of the picture in a goofy side plot involving her long-lost dad (John Lithgow, saddled with a dodgy British accent). Thankfully, it's still a lot of fun to watch (and hear) the Bellas, from Brittany Snow's Chloe to Hailee Steinfeld's Emily, even if every character's a bit more broadly played this time in a plot that barely holds together. The outtakes that appear during the end credits show snippets of whole scenes that were cut, likely pointing to a rough go for director Trish Sie (Step Up: All In), who stepped in for Elizabeth Banks. Despite this, the Pitch Perfect 2 director still provides snark from the sidelines with John Michael Higgins. (At South Bay and in the suburbs.)

The Shape of Water ★★1/2 This romantic fantasy from Guillermo del Toro (writer/director of Pan's Labyrinth) takes a page out of Ron Howard's Splash, a romantic fantasy involving a lovelorn man who falls for a mermaid and their flight from government officials who regard the aquatic creature as something subhuman. But the Mexican filmmaker flips the script, focusing on a human heroine who falls for her amphibian prince. But unlike Splash, this 1962-set fairy tale isn't a comedy; sudden spurts of blood occasionally add crimson to the film's aquatic color palette, along with flashes of flesh. This ain't Disney territory, folks. Sally Hawkins wonderfully inhabits Elisa Esposito, a mute cleaning woman who works in a bunker-like government research facility alongside chatty Zelda Fuller (Octavia Spencer), who acts as her mouthpiece, translating her sign language as the plot requires. Elisa also shares a friendship with her neighbor, Giles. Heartbreakingly played by Richard Jenkins, he's a closeted gay man who doubles as the film's narrator. But it's images rather than words that introduce us to Elisa and her daily routine: waking at dusk, then masturbating in her tub during the time it takes to boil the eggs she uses to entice the new (mer)man in her life, an "asset" being studied (and abused) in the lab she mops. As the fish-out-of-water, it's a pity actor Doug Jones doesn't become more than an elaborate special effect—and neither composer Alexandre Desplat's Amélie-like accordion cues nor del Toro's overcooked direction can compensate for a shallow character that should have made a bigger splash. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Seaport and in the suburbs.)

Star Wars: The Last Jedi ★★1/2 Mark Hamill's beloved Luke Skywalker finally makes a substantial return in writer/director Rian Johnson's elegantly designed Star Wars: The Last Jedi, coming after his brief, silent cameo during the literal cliffhanger that ended Star Wars: The Force Awakens. And while J.J. Abrams' first film in a new trilogy was an overly familiar, thinly veiled rehash of series creator George Lucas' original Star Wars from 1977, as a piece of nostalgia-driven pop art, it served as a hugely satisfying return to a galaxy far, far away. The same can't be said for Episode VIII, which once again features Finn (John Boyega), the reformed Stormtrooper who developed a conscience; Rey (Daisy Ridley), a "nobody" who discovered that the all-powerful (now more than ever) Force is strong within her; and fellow Force-wielder Kylo Ren (Adam Driver), the black-clad worshipper of Darth Vader who was revealed to be the Sith Lord's grandson and the misguided offspring of Harrison Ford's Han Solo and Carrie Fisher's Princess (now General) Leia. Ren's mom refuses to believe there's no good left within her boy, which echoes Luke's unwavering faith in the villainous Vader in Episode VI, Return of the Jedi. So how to reconcile that Luke Skywalker with the bitter, self-exiled old hermit wholly at odds with the hero we all remember? A newfound embrace of broad humor also dilutes the drama, as does a slow-moving, filmlong chase that's as drawn out as the televised pursuit of O.J. Simpson in a Ford Bronco—if it had been set to music by John Williams. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Thelma ★★★1/2 Norwegian director Joachim Trier made one of the best films of the decade with his deeply humanistic drama, Oslo, August 31st, so it was surprising to hear his latest movie described as Carrie, if Ingmar Bergman made it. But that descriptor is an oversimplification of this coming-of-age tale focused on a sheltered girl whose budding sexual desires trigger violent seizures that come with supernatural side effects. It would be easy to try to classify Trier and regular co-screenwriter Eskil Vogt's latest as a horror/thriller, but at its core, the genre hybrid is a satisfying love story. Actress Eili Harboe, 23, plays doe-eyed college freshman Thelma, whose deeply religious father (Henrik Rafaelsen) turns a rifle on the then 6-year-old (Grethe Eltervåg) during the film's shocking prologue. We'll eventually discover the tragedy that once led him to take aim at his home-schooled offspring, but not before we experience the undeniable spark that flares between Thelma and Anja (Norwegian/American musician Kaya Wilkins), an attraction that troubles the devoutly raised girl. The situation is only complicated when her unexpected emotions begin to manifest themselves telepathically. Despite this, the talented Trier remains focused on feelings rather than fireworks, grounding his high-concept hook. (At the Brattle Theatre on Jan. 19-25.)

MUSIC

Edited by Nathan Tavares

STILL TRAVELING Hold on to your harmonicas because Blues Traveler is back. The band, which catapulted onto the mainstream scene with its inescapable mid-'90s singles "Run-Around" and "Hook," is packing up its bluesy riffs and hitting the road for a 30th anniversary tour. Like anyone else blowing out the candles for the big three-oh, the band has changed over the years: The death of their original bassist led to the addition of Tad Kinchla and keyboardist Ben Wilson, and the group returned to its jam-band roots with releases on smaller labels after A&M gave them the boot. No more running around. Don't miss Blues Traveler when its hooks bring you back at the House of Blues on Jan. 26. / Nathan Tavares

Your immune system may be the key to beating cancer.

Immunotherapy, a new approach to cancer treatment, is bringing hope to cancer survivors everywhere. Immunotherapy works by empowering your body's own immune system to correctly identify and eradicate cancer cells. This approach has been used to effectively fight many types of cancer, with new research leading to greater hope each day. Speak with your doctor and visit standuptocancer.org/immunotherapy to learn if immunotherapy may be right for you.

BODY LANGUAGE

The protagonist in Andrea Lawlor's debut novel, Paul Takes the Form of a Mortal Girl, takes getting in shape to a new level. Paul Polydoris is a university student, gay club bartender and secret shapeshifter. He transitions from body to body as easily as he travels from place to place in search of emotional and sexual intimacy with as many diverse individuals as he can. Between immersive accounts of Paul's various personas and short lore-like chapters that nudge at gender issues, this story dives deep into the underbelly of attraction and identity. Shape up before Lawlor reads at Porter Square Books on Jan. 18. / Cathryn Haight

BUT ONLY ON FESTIVE OCCASIONS

It's hard to say what was biggest—the hearts, the minds, or the wallets—at Big in Boston, the Big Sister Association's gala, held at the Museum of Fine Arts to honor former first lady, senator and secretary of state Hillary Clinton.

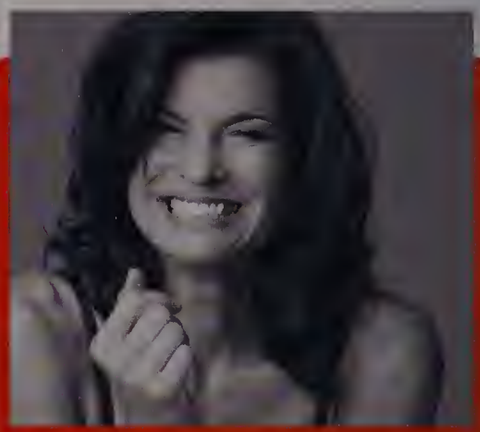
Given her profile, it's perhaps not surprising that there were protesters out front and breathless acolytes inside, as well as a few smart-alecks who made wisecracks along the lines of, "Think she's getting paid for this gig?"

The evening began with cocktails and chitter-chatter in the rotunda, followed by a sumptuous sit-down dinner in the Shapiro Family Courtyard, all of which was flawless thanks to the co-chairs, party planner nonpareil Bryan Rafanelli and advertising mogul Jack Connors. Also on-hand: co-honoree (and Camp Harborview head honcha) Sharon McNally, the big-little combo of Margaret Connelly and Alyvia Norris, state treasurer Deb Goldberg (whose grandfather founded Big Sister's precursor), her dashing and debonair husband, Michael Winter, stunning blond emcee Lisa Hughes, her lovable shutterbug, Mike Casey, development giant Joe Corcoran, media mogul Josefina Bonilla, banking babe Hannah Grove, the incomparable Courtney and Michael Forrester, uber-philanthropist Don Rodman, the achingly lovely Saskia Epstein and her handsome other half, Paul, the perfectly low-key Fotene Demoulas, restaurateurs extraordinaire Michael Pagliarini and Pamela Ralston, and one guest who recalled, "See that woman over there? Her husband is tall, bald and pale, like mine, and once at a party I put my arm around him."

Dinner was punctuated by speeches, including one by Clinton, who was escorted onstage by a cohort of Little Sisters and called the recognition, "The most amazing award I've ever gotten."

One attendee forgot his wallet at home and was forced to borrow money from a friend, who said, "Here's 40 bucks. With interest, you'll owe me 60 by Friday," and another who had grown her hair and then shaved it for Locks of Love commented, "I'm looking very earth-mother-slash-living-in-the-wrong-decade."

However, the evening's best exchange came when someone suggested to a guest that he should consider volunteering as a Big Brother.



"I'm not sure I'm the best example," he said, raising his wine glass. "I drink way too much."

IS THAT A SKYSCRAPER IN YOUR POCKET?

Proof positive that a queen outranks an earl: the (somewhat surprising) fact that the Masterpiece Theater series Victoria did better than the insanely popular Downton Abbey in its first season.

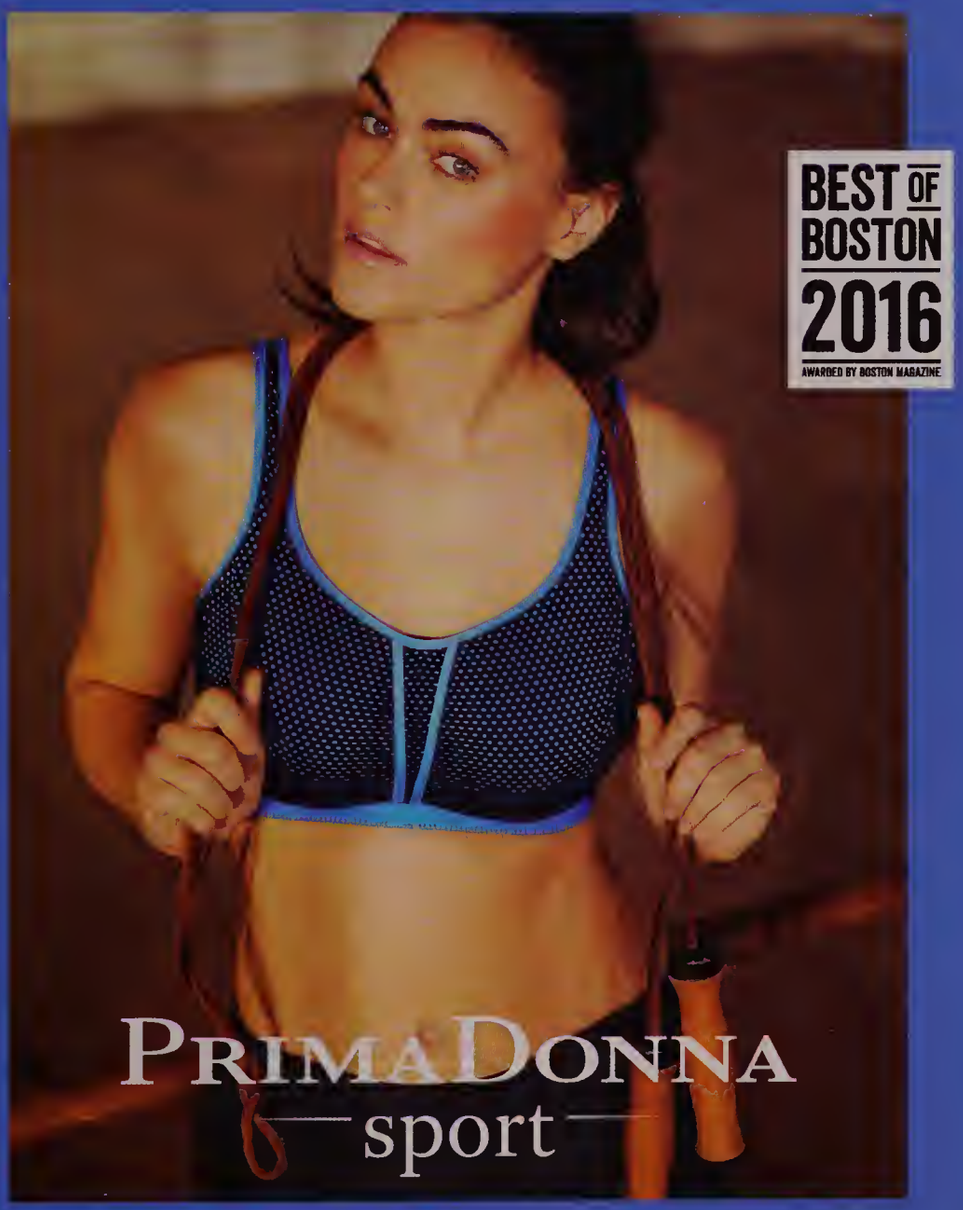
That was only one of the many fun facts that surfaced when the WGBH Ralph Lowell Society hosted a Victoria preview party for the royal bio-series at its swanky Allston studios.

The afternoon event included a sneak peek at season two, followed by a Q&A session with series star Jenna Coleman, writer/producer Daisy Goodwin, and the mistress of Masterpiece Theater, Rebecca Eaton, which was capped by a cocktail party that included a deliciously lethal gin concoction. (Fun fact number 2: Queen Victoria's preferred tipple was an even more lethal combo of whiskey and wine.)

IN MEMORIAM

Incandescent. That's the best word to describe Linda Cole Petrosian, who died at 57 of esophageal cancer the day after New Year's. The daughter of legendary couturier Yolanda Cellucci, she was a doting daughter, mother, sister, aunt and friend, and—to use a cliche that her family is no doubt tired of hearing by now—one of the most beautiful people, both inside and out, whom I've ever had the pleasure to know. One of Boston's top models for a good deal of her life, she could have easily joined the ranks of the international, one-named sylphs if she'd wanted to, but she never took herself that seriously. As often as not, she modeled for charity rather than gain, and her largesse, joie de vivre and humor were infectious. Anyone who ever saw her sashay down a runway (and she was one of the few local models who really knew how to walk), heard her laughter, or got caught like a deer in the headlights of her incredible smile will never forget her. Goodbye, gorgeous. I'll miss goofing around with you backstage, waving dollar bills at drag queens with you, or just bumping into you on the street. Heaven just got a whole lot more beautiful.

Among the lords, ladies and commoners assembled: stationmaster Jon Abbott, the Marnell family who owns Viking Cruises, Chestnut Hillions Cokie and Lee Perry, the ever-affable Chris McKeown, Beacon Hill thoroughbred Hilary Gabrieli, beneficent bluebloods Jeffrey and Jane Marshall, the remarkably charming Kitty Ames, Cantabrigian Carol Ann Kania, 'GBH bad boy Jared Bowen, and one woman who saw fit to wear elbow-length white gloves.



The afternoon's funniest remark, meanwhile, came when someone mentioned a recent addition to the Boston skyline, and another guest exclaimed, "What a magnificent erection!" ◆

UMaine is pleased to offer the Flagship Match Program for out-of-state students entering in fall 2018. The Flagship Match Program is a competitive scholarship that guarantees academically qualified, first-year students from several states will pay the same tuition and fee rate as their home state's flagship institution. All other students entering fall 2018 will receive a significant and competitive grant that will help offset the cost of nonresident tuition and fees at UMaine.

FIRST GLANCE

MY FIRST JOB WAS AS A 6-year-old paper boy on my brother's daily afternoon route. What did I learn? I learned you'll even get ripped off by your own brother: I made $1 a week. And I learned the newspaper business was dying: I got laid off at age 12 when the paper ceased its evening delivery. Despite that, I've got plenty of stories of roaming my neighborhood to tell, and many of them came flooding back to me as we reported on some interesting first jobs from Boston chefs. There's the time that one newbie scalded Barbara Lynch's arm, and a story from another would-be chef who skipped out on her graduation ceremony for an interview with Gordon Hamersley. You'll have to read our feature story to find out who.

Then there's our cover subject, Jamie Bissonnette, who's rapidly rising the culinary ranks as a household name. The co-owner/chef of Coppa, Toro and Little Donkey dishes on building Legos to relax, his business partner Ken Oringer's disdain for eggs and how Toro expanded to Dubai and Bangkok. There's even more to chew on in this Chefs issue as well, from a pop-up bagelmaker finding a new home in Jamaica Plain to a chat with the women behind Gastropod. And don't miss Hannah Sheinberg's profile of Moody's chef/owner Joshua Smith, who details all his plans for expansion and what motivates him to keep making the meat. Smith even fills us in on his first job too—sweeping the floors at the Golden Arches. He's come a long from Big Macs. Dig in!

JORDAN GREENWAY

RYAN DONATO

Seeking Golden Glory

On Feb. 5, Boston University's Jordan Greenway and Harvard's Ryan Donato will face off against each other at TD Garden in the opening round of the Beanpot. Fewer than 10 days later, they'll both be wearing the red-white-and-blue on the other side of the world, taking the ice in Pyeongchang on Feb. 14 against Slovenia for the men's Olympic team. It's a rare opportunity for two college hockey players to be on the world's biggest stage, one that came after the NHL decided not to send its players to the games for the first time in two decades.

"We talked about how it's kind of funny, when the team was announced," Greenway says of the quick turnaround between Boston's biggest tourney and the Olympics. Both players will miss the championship/consolation round while chasing a gold medal. "Obviously, the Beanpot is a great tourney, but this is a once-in-a-lifetime thing."

The 25-person roster includes players competing in the minor leagues, foreign leagues, two other college stars (from St. Cloud State and Denver) and an NHL veteran and Boston College grad, 39-year-old Brian Gionta.

"My goal is to be a key player to help the team win, but I also want to learn a lot from the veterans," Donato says. The Scituate native also has a secret weapon when it comes to Olympic lessons. He leaned on his father, Ted, who played in the 1992 games and is now his head coach at Harvard.

"He might've gotten a hint I was on the team before I did, but he let me tell my mom, which was awesome," Donato says. "His first piece of advice was don't worry about it till it comes."

Greenway tapped BU's Olympic star Mike Eruzione, of the Miracle on Ice fame, for his own guidance. "He told me, it's such a big event, but you need to know you're going over there to win a gold medal."

Greenway will be in the spotlight even more than the rest of his teammates, as he's the first black player on the U.S. men's hockey team. It's an honor that he didn't even know about till after he was named, and one that the BU junior chalks up to a fluke. If the NHL players were allowed to compete, he figures Dustin Byfuglien and Seth Jones might have gained that distinction this year, but he's not letting that dampen his enthusiasm over the accomplishment.

"I couldn't be more excited to be the first of hopefully many," Greenway says. "There's not a lot of African Americans playing hockey, and hopefully it'll allow me to be a role model." / Matt Martinelli

HOLE IN THE WALL Exodus Bagels will serve a variety of bagels at its new JP shop

A BAGEL POP-UP FINDS A PERMANENT PLACE IN JP

EXODUS BAGELS
3346 Woshington St., Boston
(617-323-3354) exodusbogels.com

For owner Adam Hirsh, bringing Exodus Bagels to Jamaica Plain was a homecoming of sorts. What began as a Kickstarter campaign in 2016 to help fund a permanent location for the local bagel pop-up that operates a kitchen in Roslindale led Hirsh to the same area he has resided in for the past 15 years. While the Roslindale space will continue to function as Exodus' commercial kitchen, the retail spot on Washington Street, set to open in February, will be where Hirsh and co-owner Priscilla Andrade will serve fresh bagels and sandwiches for their own community.

"I'm making sure what I'm bringing is for them too—for the neighborhood and the residents who live here," Hirsh says. "I wasn't bringing some fancy restaurant. I was bringing one of those daily, get-to-know-your-neighbors establishments."

Exodus will take up residence in the space formerly occupied by Canto 6 Bakery & Cafe, known for its baked goods and breakfast pastries, which shuttered in August 2016. Hirsh will pay tribute to the beloved neighborhood spot with sweet treats like babka and whoopie pies, though the storefront, which is licensed for seven seats, will include an opening menu that is otherwise recognizable to Exodus patrons.

"It's going to be everything that we brought to markets and pop-ups, but available six days a week and with the obvious notion that we always grow into our space, so we're going to do a lot more here," Hirsh says.

Customers will order at the counter—made with white oak sourced from the Arnold Arboretum—from a menu of flavored bagels, such as salt, sesame, jalapeño cheddar or garlic asiago. Spreads go beyond plain cream cheese, with variations like horseradish dill, bacon everything and Sriracha, along with a white bean spread for vegans. The six to eight sandwiches include options like the Monumental, made with egg, onion jam, plain cream cheese and bacon or avocado, and the Cluck, featuring house-made chicken salad, smoked gouda and spicy relish. Guests can wash it all down with hot or iced coffee, and should also keep an eye out for forthcoming dishes like brisket and pizza bagels.

"We recognize that all food is nostalgic, but certain foods are even more so," Hirsh says. "Bagels are one of those foods that no matter how you get introduced to them, you identify with that particular flavor. That becomes the one that tastes like your past."

Good Eats: Toast to Tiger

The new Sunday brunch menu at Tiger Mama hits you with an existential question: Savory or sweet? "For me, brunch is a combination of savory, interesting, dynamic flavors, and also classics," says Tiffani Faison, chef/owner of the Southeast Asian-inspired hot spot and the neighboring Sweet Cheeks Q. The menu of your hangover dreams features Tiger Mama favorites, alongside new dishes that sing with Faison's crazy creative twists. Take the Boons bread French toast, a decadent mashup of bread pudding and griddled French toast that's topped with a white chocolate, pistachio and kaffir lime crumble and a bruleed coconut cream. "The whole thing is ooey-gooey with crunchy parts on the bread," Faison says. / Nathan Tavares

RARE PAIRS

What makes a wine taste delicious with food? Balance. For a broad range of dishes, light- to medium-bodied wines that are tart, minerally, herbal and subtly flavored work best. Grape varieties that share these characteristics tend to accent food without overpowering it, while others with more flamboyant personalities can dominate the equation. These three may not hit a home run with every preparation, but they're surefire winners with an impressive batting average—and are likely to make the chef smile. / Sandy Block

HUBER OBERE STEIGEN GRÜNER VELTLINER, TRAISENTAL, 2016

There's as much versatility in vegetarian and vegan diets as there is in the carnivore world, though diners often ask for recommendations as though a perfect one-size-fits-all match exists. However, grüner veltliner works wonders with raw or cooked green vegetables. This bottle has an undercurrent of white pepper, green herbs, lemon and snap peas that will hold its own against salads of all kinds.

MICHAEL DAVID INKBLOT CABERNET FRANC, LODI, 2014

Is there a better-kept secret than how good cab franc is with virtually everything? This is a gorgeous wine, oozing raspberry, cocoa, mint and clove aromas. Silky and lush on the palate, with a serious tannin statement, it's most at home with a swordfish dressed in a tapenade, or lamb and rosemary, but it would also complement a chewy grain dish with roasted root vegetables and grilled mushrooms.

$36, Brookline Fine Wine & Spirits

TXOMIN ETXANIZ, GETARIAKO TXAKOLINA, 2016

This tongue twister is produced in the Basque country of Spain within hailing distance of the stormy, windy Bay of Biscay by a family with roots in the region that date to the 17th century. Picture a plate of raw shellfish: This is what you want. Faintly effervescent, this low alcohol charmer with green apple, chalky, saline notes would also fit right in with a wide range of plant-based dishes, or anything slightly salty.

South Shore sweet shop Hilliards Chocolates has a new treat brewing. The fourth-generation family business—currently helmed by husband-and-wife team Judy Hilliard and Charlie McCarthy—recently welcomed craft beer brittle to its repertoire of specialty chocolates and candies. Hilliards spices up a traditional peanut brittle recipe with a splash of IPA from Easton's Shovel Town Brewery that's combined with Spanish peanuts, sugar and butter before being hand-stirred while it cooks in a copper kettle. The newcomer's available by the bag ($8) or by the box ($16) at the brand's brick-and-mortar stores in Easton, Norwell and Mansfield and also online—so there's plenty of chances to crack off some brittle while cracking open a cold one this winter. / Cathryn Haight

EAT IT UP: The women behind the Gastropod podcast stop by the Museum of Science on Feb. 7.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

With their podcast Gastropod hitting earbuds every two weeks, journalists Nicola Twilley and Cynthia Graber—who is also a Somerville resident—serve their hungry listeners stories of food, science and history. Consider this chat your appetizer before the duo hits the Museum of Science for a live show on Feb. 7. / Nathan Tavares

HOW DO YOU CHOOSE TOPICS FOR THE PODCAST? Nicola: There are a few different ways. We get awesome listener suggestions, so we have a running list of those that we turn to. There are sometimes things that each of us has been passionate about for a while or want to do. ... We try to have a good mix of different topics so it's not all just like, "This is an episode about a particular food." But then it's not all heady or abstract topics like school lunches. Cynthia: And as part of the mix we want to make sure we're not just covering Western topics and Western food. We want to make sure that we have a diverse mix of voices. We cover issues of social justice; we cover stories about farming and sustainability. So when we're looking at the mix of the next 10 episodes or so, we want to make sure that these are all the things that are playing in our heads to balance out.

WHAT ARE YOUR FAVORITE MEALS? Cynthia: That's such a hard thing to ask people who are so obsessed with food. You know, I'll eat something and say, like, "This is the thing I'll want to eat forever!" And then you eat something else and think, "No, no, this is the thing I'll want to eat forever." [Laughs.] Nicola: I'm not prepared to commit to an absolute favorite. But in my final week's worth of meals—I'm not just doing my last meal on death row, I'm planning the entire week—I would definitely have a roast chicken dinner. I grew up in England, and a roast is very important, with roast potatoes and vegetables and the whole shebang. Cynthia: For me, my comfort food is more Mediterranean. I lived in Israel for three years. I grew up eating a lot of foods that are very Mediterranean. I make hummus at home; I make shakshuka at home. Lentils and rice and fried onions. Mejadra is a comfort food dish for me.

WHAT IS YOUR LIVE EVENT GOING TO BE LIKE? Nicola: It's really fun. It's really interactive. We structure it as a three-course meal so there are three separate sections about different topics. This year, we're talking about aphrodisiacs, about pasta shapes and about hacking taste. And there's interactive tastings and questions and guests coming up on stage and special guest experts throughout. Cynthia: It's not literally a three-course meal. It's a three-course feast of ideas and you get a tiny taste of food in the show. Don't come hungry. Do eat dinner beforehand. [Laughs.]

When I Dip, You Dip, We Dip

Not all of us are following Tom Brady's lead and ditching nightshades. Just in time for the Super Bowl, Columbus Hospitality Group chef/owner Jamie Mammano gives us some salsa lessons with this traditional pico de gallo recipe—and if you can take the heat, the Mistral maestro suggests adding diced jalapeños for an extra kick—to go along with his Needham-based Mi Niña's authentic white corn tortilla chips. / Sarah Hagman

Ingredients:
- 6 tomatoes
- ½ medium-sized onion
- Handful of cilantro
- 1 lime
- Salt to taste

Preparation:
Finely chop tomatoes, onion and cilantro. Add to bowl and mix. Squeeze the juice of one lime into the bowl. Refrigerate and salt immediately before serving. Enjoy!

A MIND OF HER OWN

A DEBUT NOVEL TACKLES MENTAL ILLNESS AND A BOND BETWEEN SISTERS

Everything Here Is Beautiful* by Mira T. Lee
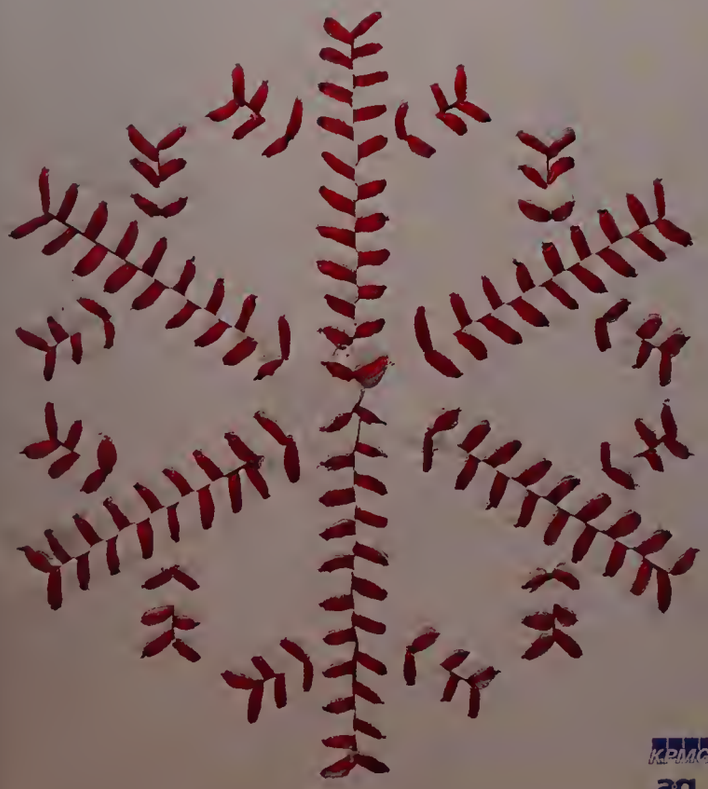
Published by Pamela Dorman Books, 358 pages, $26



Cantabrigian author Mira T. Lee portrays her protagonist as walking a fine line—jittery and glittery—between adventure and mental illness in this debut novel, Everything Here Is Beautiful. Lucia, a Chinese-American with a more mentally stable sister, Miranda, is open to quick connections and sudden decisions. Her husband, Yonah, is a one-armed Russian Jew, a divorced father who owns a health food store and shares her colorful energy.

As the book's narrators shift, readers see Lucia reporting her own slides into psychotic delusions—where snakes tell her what to do—while Miranda describes going to the hospital, frantically persuading Lucia to take those hated-but-necessary medications. Back on her feet, Lucia leaves Yonah for Manny, an undocumented immigrant, and they have a beloved baby. After dealing with the inevitable postpartum psychosis, Lucia abruptly moves the family to Ecuador where wonderful friendships and lively times play out in the countryside. She writes for a paper, but then, of course, things go south once again.

Lucia's heart, even in sunnier times, maintains its irrational way and she finds herself returning to familiar faces. Miranda and Manny develop an ability to deal with Lucia's troubles, staying on top of medications and moods. Lee excels at representing the painful, all-encompassing effects of serious mental illness on a family.

From page 155: "The serpents invaded my head after Essy was born. I would sit in my bedroom, not moving for hours, terrified to wake them. Flanked by banana plants, oriented by the window, my knees pointed precisely to two o'clock. I needed to align my body with the earth's magnetic field, like a grazing cow or caribou—only this way could my innermost thoughts resist detection by the mind X-rays from Central Compound." ◆

BEIGNET—DONE THAT

CLASSIC NEW ORLEANS SERVES UP HISTORY AND FOOD

New York might be the City That Never Sleeps, but New Orleans doesn't have much use for a pillow or alarm clock either. From debauchery on Bourbon Street to the famed beignets served at all hours of the day at Café Du Monde, you're hard-pressed to find time for rest in the Big Easy, a city that goes beyond beads and balconies, with as much interesting food as rich history in every nook and cranny.

Start your trip by taking a spin on the Carousel Bar at the Hotel Monteleone. This infamous French Quarter spot has been offering rides for 65 years, along with classic cocktails like the Sazerac—declared the official cocktail of New Orleans in 2008 by the Louisiana Legislature—and the fleur des lis, a refreshing combination of gin, St-Germain, lemon juice, cucumber and ginger ale. And be sure to stop into a few boîtes where some of the world's most famous cocktails originated, like the upscale Arnaud's for a classic French 75 or Tujague's for a creamy grasshopper, made using a mixture of white and dark crème de cacao, crème de menthe, brandy and heavy cream.

Customers are encouraged to take their drinks to go, so grab a cocktail for the road and make your way to Bourbon Street. After you take it all in, duck down Frenchmen Street for some live jazz at places like the Maison and the Spotted Cat Music Club.

If you want to beat the crowds, wake up early to roam the French Quarter while most of the city is still recovering from late-night shenanigans. The brightly colored houses and elaborately decorated balconies are a beacon for amateur and professional photographers, particularly in the early morning light. Stroll down the far end of Bourbon Street to Lafitte's Blacksmith Shop Bar, one of the country's oldest bars that's served drinks since the 1700s. Rumor has it that the ghost of its namesake—a privateer, sailor, spy and hero of the Battle of New Orleans—still haunts the dimly lit quarters.

Once you've worked up an appetite, head to brunch at Brennan's on Royal Street—you can't miss the bright pink stucco façade and green awning above the entrance. Spearheaded by chef Slade Rushing, the Creole cuisine is as colorful as the recently renovated dining rooms, which include the lavish and eclectic Queen's, King's and Havana Rooms. Kick your meal off with the Caribbean milk punch, made using Buffalo Trace Bourbon, Bacardi 8-year rum, cream and vanilla bean, before choosing from a selection of sweet and savory dishes, such as Brennan's original eggs Hussarde, the huckleberry blintz or vanilla-scented French toast. No trip to the restaurant is complete without ordering the bananas Foster—created at Brennan's in 1951 by chef Paul Blangé—that's flambéed tableside and served sizzling on top of vanilla ice cream.

For more casual fare, grab breakfast at Willa Jean, a laid-back retro cafe and bakery in the nearby Garden District. Heat things up with the fried chicken served on fresh-baked biscuits with a douse of Tabasco-honey, and cool off with a bourbon apple cider slushie. Take a post-meal stroll around Jackson Square, sitting at the base of the commanding St. Louis Cathedral, to admire the local artists and street performers posted up daily around the park's perimeter.

For those with an appetite for antiquities, head to Napoleon House, where executive chef and history buff Chris Montero whips up a warm Italian muffuletta served alongside housemade Italian olive salad. Sip on a Pimm's cup as you take in the restaurant's 200-year-old interior and courtyard. If you're lucky, Montero might be on hand to give you a history lesson about the restaurant, which was first occupied by Nicholas Girod, the mayor of New Orleans from 1812 to 1815, who allegedly offered his residence to Napoleon Bonaparte in 1821 as a sanctuary during the emperor's exile.

Get a taste of the city's contemporary side on the ground floor of the historic Pontchartrain Hotel. In the elegant Caribbean Room, perch on velvet couches and examine the art-filled walls, including a larger-than-life portrait of New Orleans native Lil Wayne enjoying the restaurant's signature dessert: the Mile High Pie with towering layers of ice cream topped with chocolate sauce.

A trip to Café Du Monde is essential during any New Orleans visit, so stop in for a plate of warm beignets and a café au lait. Before you leave town, be sure to grab a can of chicory coffee and a box of beignet mix to keep the party going at home. As they say in N'Awlins, laissez les bons temps rouler—let the good times roll. ◆

SUN DO BOO-YAH!

IN KENMORE SQUARE, KAJU BRINGS KOREAN DELIGHTS TO EXPERTS AND NEWBIES ALIKE

FINDING YOUR WAY INTO UNFAMILIAR culinary traditions can be daunting. Overseas travel, immigrant food-geek friends and a nerdy commitment to blind experimentation can help, but not everyone has those luxuries. So it matters when a restaurant reaches out to curious newcomers, as does Kenmore Square's new Kaju Tofu House, with a menu packed with photographs of its dishes and mostly English food words. The most timid newbie can wander in here with zero knowledge of Korean language or cuisine and easily order a mild feast of dumplings, noodles and stir-fries: Hey, not so strange! But for the adventurous and those with more experienced guides, Kaju also serves plenty of the fierce, vivid flavors that Koreans also love: aromatic, savory and sweet, occasionally funkily fermented and fiery hot. This starts with the house specialty, sundubu jigae, here listed as tofu soup ($14).

Boston got its first sundubu specialist a few years ago in Kaju's elder sibling in Allston. As at the original, it's always a smart bet to get the specialty, which you'll notice on nearly every table here. Start by specifying one of five levels of chili heat (from the fireless "white" to the molten "extra spicy") and any of 16 combinations of vegetables, meat, and/or seafood add-ins. (Nod when your server offers to add an egg.) First to arrive is a bowl of excellent short-grain white rice and four banchan (tiny side dishes) to whet your appetite (refills, $1 each). The assortment varies daily, typically cabbage kimchi (lightly fiery and pickled), sesame-dressed mung bean sprouts, sweet/savory fried shredded squid (the stuff that looks like pale Easter-basket grass), marinated mushrooms, seaweed with BBQ sauce, a creamily-pureed potato salad and intensely fishy, chili-dusted fried tiny anchovies, all of above-average quality. The soup arrives bubbling-hot in a clay pot; break up the egg that was just cracked into it while it's still soft-boiled, then swirl in the yolk. This bowl of savory goodness has a wondrously tender texture, the soft tofu shredded into scrambled-egg-like curds, and a rich broth flavored with copious aromatics and subtle umami-enhancers like mushrooms and fermented anchovy fish sauce. Add-ins such as beef and seafood (slices of eye round plus shrimp, mussels and cockles) are tender and quick-cooked. The result is eminently satisfying, leaving one feeling full but not leaden, and a perfect restorative on a rough weekend morning-after or a cold winter evening.

Bibimbop ($12, choice of rib-eye, chicken or tofu) is another brilliant and very substantial one-pot meal, a layer of rice topped with mushrooms, spinach, carrots, cucumbers, sprouts, nori, scallions and a sunny side fried egg, with a squeeze bottle of gochujang (the ketchup-thick, gorgeously sweet/hot Korean chili condiment), all for you to toss like a salad. (If you opt for the more substantial hot-stone-pot version, wait a bit to let the rice develop a crunchy, caramelized crust.)

It's also easy to graze with a group here, starting with plates of dumplings like shrimp shumai ($7), delicately lovely in steamed wrappers, and the larger, turnover-shaped mandu ($8) with veggie or beef fillings and a fine, golden crispness when ordered fried. The fusion-like, food-truck-inspired Kaju taco ($4 each, $14 for four) is overstuffed with proteins like bulgogi (rib-eye) or spicy pork, topped with chopped tomatoes and a slaw-like cabbage preparation, and drizzled with gochujang aioli: messy but crushable. There's a few crunchy, savory bites in each crispy rice egg ($4), a Korean take on the Scotch egg with a boiled egg wrapped in ground pork and kimchi, and a brittle wrapper of fried rice subbing for a deep-fried batter coating.

The bright-orange kimchi pancake ($13) is a big, savory, barely-spicy crepe loaded with vegetables and flanked by a good dipping sauce of soy, chilies, scallions and sesame. Crab avocado salad ($8) topped with vivid-orange, bubbly salmon roe is mayo-heavy and mild, with nice chunks of real crab. Larger shareable plates include grilled spicy pork ($19), loin and onions cut into thin strips, its bright-red color betokening a searing chili heat; clay-pot galbi ($19), sweetly-marinated and grilled slices of bone-in beef short rib, served over rice that you again want to let brown and crackle in the pot like socarrat in a paella pan; and a generous plate of skinny pan-fried noodles with copious diced chicken thigh ($15) in a mild, soy-based sauce with onions, cabbage, broccoli and sprouts. Beverages are limited to canned soft drinks and juices ($2-$3); be sure to request the complimentary nutty-tasting barley tea.

Beyond the helpful menus, the front-of-house staff has excellent English and is friendly and patient with neophytes. The space is cheery but modest: The 34-seat room does its best to brighten a basement setting with sand-colored tiled walls and butter-toned Naugahyde banquettes, plus granite tabletops and battered wooden chairs. I prefer to think the humble ambiance means the owners' money went into the kitchen, a notion upheld by the consistent quality and gentle prices across the menu. Whatever your level of expertise with the cuisine—from the everyday ease shown by the many Korean ex-pat customers here to the What-me-kimchi? bewilderment shown by friends I brought along, ordered for, and sent home stuffed and elated—Kaju Kenmore delivers the often-hearty, only occasionally ferocious, mostly not-so-strange, and reliably delicious goods. ◆

HIGHLIGHTS FROM HIGH SOCIETY

➜ On Jan. 11, the Genesis Foundation for Children held its Winter Mixer at the Bell in Hand Tavern, where people mingled over drinks and supper, met board members and heard from a family benefiting from the cause. The evening's 75 guests raised more than $2,000 to help the foundation fund the diagnosis and care of children born with physical and intellectual disabilities and genetic disorders.

➜ The Boston Harbor Hotel's 29th annual Boston Wine Festival was uncorked on Jan. 12 at a Grand Opening Reception. The night gave a taste of the series of winemaker-hosted dinners, seminars and celebratory brunches that will take place through March 30. More than 400 guests gathered at food stations for samples of a dozen wines and a chance to compare tasting notes with festival founder and executive chef Daniel Bruce.

ASK CHERYL

Q: I AM THINKING ABOUT GETTING MY FIRST BOTOX TREATMENT, BUT I DON'T WANT TO LOOK "DONE". WILL I LOOK FAKE?

A: No, you should look the same, just more relaxed. Botox is a technique-sensitive treatment. You should not lose the ability to show expression when you are treated by a clinician who is licensed, trained, and a medical expert in facial anatomy. It is important to talk to your specialist about the results you want from treatment.

Botox, and other brands of cosmetic botulinum toxin such as Dysport and Xeomin, are used in the upper part of the face to relax the muscles that cause lines. Specifically, frown lines between the eyebrows, on the forehead, and crow's feet at the outer parts of the eyes. The procedure takes 10 minutes or less and the results last about four months.

Botox treatments result in a younger, more rested appearance but you still look completely natural.

SPECIAL OFFER:

ACTING UP

BEAUTIFUL AND MOVING, BPM (BEATS PER MINUTE) FINDS MUSIC AMID ACTIVISM

In the late 1980s and early '90s, the tactics employed by the activists of ACT UP (AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power)—an advocacy group that originated within New York's LGBTQ community—were deemed extremist by those who viewed the devastating virus as punishment for deviant behavior.

Journalist and filmmaker David France delved into this subject with his Oscar-nominated 2012 documentary (and subsequent nonfiction book), How to Survive a Plague, which employed archival footage to chronicle the efforts of ACT UP during the early years of the AIDS epidemic. Now, French filmmaker Robin Campillo offers a fictionalized companion piece, BPM (Beats Per Minute), to dramatize the Paris-based offshoot of the group to which he belonged. Beyond the stamp of the personal, Campillo also relies on his formidable talents as a screenwriter to deeply humanize a handful of members from ACT UP's Gallic wing.

Perhaps best known for They Came Back, his debut as a writer/director, Campillo also co-wrote The Class, Laurent Cantet's 2008 Palme d'Or winner that focused on the frequently tumultuous interactions between a racially diverse group of high school students in Paris as their teacher tries to focus their debates over the course of a year. That experience has paid rich dividends here, as much of BPM's drama also takes place within a classroom setting, with ACT UP's Parisian members regularly meeting in a lecture hall to plan their demonstrations in chaotic group discussions. And like the students in The Class, not all of these activists who "lived politics in first person" are alike.

Thibault (Antoine Reinartz), the diplomatic leader of the group, is—like many of his peers—a young, HIV-positive gay man. But there are also a few women, a couple of them serving alongside Thibault in leadership positions: the passionate Sophie (Adèle Haenel) and the slightly less vocal Eva (Aloïse Sauvage). Although both are also gay, the diverse organization isn't exclusively homosexual or even "poz," as evidenced by Hélène (Catherine Vinatier), a middle-aged straight woman who attends the weekly meetings with her shaggy-haired son, Max (Félix Maritaud), a straight teenager who contracted HIV via blood transfusion.

The HIV-negative newbie functions as our eyes and ears, an audience surrogate.

Max at least has a sense of humor about how he acquired his status, mixing up fake blood in the bathtub he shares with his mother, which he then fills into condoms to be tossed like water-balloon grenades at the walls and windows of Big Pharma companies—the same businesses that are slow to share their findings, directly impacting the infected who don't have time on their side. Or, during the film's opening moments, when he impulsively hurls one of those blood bombs into the face of a government official who's in the middle of making a public presentation on their handling of the AIDS crisis when the group storms the stage.

The impromptu shock tactics continue when Sean (Nahuel Pérez Biscayart), a provocative founding member of the Paris chapter, decides to handcuff the civil servant as the group chants slogans and blows whistles. During all this, Campillo introduces his nonlinear editing style, intercutting the chaotic scene—which had been planned as a nonviolent protest—with the fallout after the meeting, as the group displays its fractured viewpoints, including the ideological differences between the level-headed Thibault and the mischievous Sean, who nevertheless is given a platform to speak.

Taking in the chaos is Nathan (Arnaud Valois), a handsome stranger who's attending his first ACT UP assembly. The HIV-negative newbie functions as our eyes and ears, an audience surrogate as he gradually becomes active in the organization—and romantically involved with Sean. The love affair builds to a shattering conclusion as the film realistically presents the unfair inevitability of declining health during the early days of the epidemic. But rather than settle into soapy melodrama between two lovers, Campillo continues to focus on the culture of the group and how each individual responds to the events in their own ways, presented as only a person with firsthand experience could.

Even though I'd recommend you bring tissues, be aware that Campillo isn't just unblinking with his look at the devastating effects of AIDS, but also with his compassionate look at a hopeful community that still finds time to celebrate life. The film's title not only refers to heart rates tracked on hospital monitors, but also to the house music beats that pulse throughout the picture during its occasional breaks on the disco floor. And while silence might equal death on the hospital monitors, Arnaud Rebotini's electronic score will ensure that these heroes won't go quietly into the night. Ultimately, it's these sights and sounds that will send the activists out on a high that will resonate with viewers long after the lights have come up. ◆

BOWIE ALUMNI RECONVENE TO BRING HERO'S MUSIC BACK TO LIFE

CELEBRATING DAVID BOWIE comes to the Chevalier Theatre in Medford on Feb. 16.

David Bowie left this planet two years ago, and his passing still leaves a profound sense of shock and loss, not only for fans but for the many musicians who performed with him. That's certainly the case for keyboardist Mike Garson, the longest tenured player from Bowie's bands, appearing on more than a dozen albums and performing 1,000 concerts, including the singer's first and last American shows.

"Every time I'm telling stories or thinking about him, I'm holding back tears," says Garson, 72, now the musical director for Celebrating David Bowie, an international tour that unites him with other alumni for a career-spanning retrospective of the British rock icon's work, landing at Medford's Chevalier Theatre on Feb. 16.

"He's obviously impacted me as a friend first—and as an artist," Garson says. "I was a little older than David, so he wasn't someone I was aware of when I joined [his Spiders from Mars band] in 1972, 'cause I was involved in the jazz world. But to everyone who comes to these shows, it's like the soundtrack of their life."

On the phone from Berlin, the city where Bowie recorded "Heroes" as part of a late '70s trilogy of revered albums, Garson recalls the previous night's show in the Netherlands, where a teenage girl came up afterward and cried in his arms for a few minutes. "This man's impact is as great as anyone who has come through the music scene and passed," the keyboardist says of shared catharsis with fans. "It's overwhelming, humbling, shocking and, in a way, never-ending. I'm finding that my biggest joy is bringing the music to them and hearing them sing with us."

The "us" includes a changing pool of players who recorded and toured with Bowie. For the U.S. dates, Garson will be joined by bassist Carmine Rojas (who worked on Bowie's '80s commercial watershed Let's Dance) as well as guitarists Gerry Leonard (Heathen, Reality) and Earl Slick, whose own sprawling tenure included work on Bowie's Diamond Dogs, Young Americans and Station to Station. Slick's son Lee John Madeloni handles the drums. For the vocals, Bernard Fowler—a longtime backup singer for the Rolling Stones—splits the repertoire with Guatemalan spark plug Gaby Moreno, and the tour promises other "special guests" along the way.

"Every time I'm telling stories or thinking about him, I'm holding back tears."

To hear Garson rattle off the names of alumni and friends who either performed at earlier shows (among them Adrian Belew and cameo guests Sting and Gary Oldman) or who might join later brings to mind Bowie's own revolving door of musical talent. "He was the ultimate casting director," Garson says, "and he had the sixth sense that everyone he chose was the right one for that project."

Garson credits his own foundation in a broad array of musical styles—from jazz and classical to gospel and pop—for his invitations back into the chameleonic singer's fold. "[My] first two years, I played in five bands with him and I was the only one he kept," says Garson, who worked on '70s albums Aladdin Sane (forging an avant-garde piano solo on the title track), Diamond Dogs and Young Americans, only to return for '90s outings Outside and Earthling (in an underrated band that sported ex-Bostonian guitarist Reeves Gabrels and delved into electronic drum 'n' bass). Bowie, he says, "was just trying to expand his wings and soak it all up."

Garson approaches Celebrating David Bowie in much the same way. Shows in Europe spanned 30 wide-ranging songs, and the keyboardist talks about adding others from the era he shared with Slick as well as personal favorites such as the late '60s leftover "Conversation Piece" and "Where Are We Now?" from 2013's The Next Day. "I'm digging deep into the catalog, but I'm still doing 'Life on Mars?' and 'Changes' and 'Ziggy [Stardust],'" Garson says. "People would be very upset if I did all esoteric and they'd be upset if I just tried to milk the hits."

In turn, expect some twists. For instance, Garson says he spontaneously added a section to his "Aladdin Sane" solo in the Netherlands. "That's what [Bowie] would want from me, to keep pushing it forward," Garson says. "He wasn't big on getting stuck in the comfort zone." ◆

HOLD THE PHONE

GETTING THE DOWNLOAD ON MY APP ADDICTION

YESTERDAY, I CHECKED MY PHONE 32 times. I know this because I have an app called Checky. I also spent an hour and 40 minutes on my phone, which I know because I have an app called Moment. So far today, I've used 21 percent of my daily maximum recommended screen time of 160 minutes, and I know that because I also have an app called Hooked. It takes a lot of apps to keep track of whether you're spending too much time looking at apps.

I downloaded these three screen-time narcs because of an encroaching fear that I use my phone too much. I can't stand in line at the grocery store without sneaking my trusty 6S out of my pocket. When I'm on a plane, I feel a moment of dread when I'm forced to engage airplane mode. The other day I was looking at my phone during my kid's basketball game. But only when he was on the bench. I still felt like a cretin.

Am I really though? I needed evidence. All three of these apps offer some combination of monitoring and coaching, the latter ranging from light encouragement (yay, you didn't look at your phone 200 times!) to hard lockouts, the phone equivalent of a werewolf chaining himself to the wall before the full moon rises.

Hooked turns your phone habit into a game, ranking you against other users. As I write this, I'm ranked 213th in the game, my score trailing that of "LaTitPlay" (32nd) but just ahead of "Hamzoo75" (214th). The irony of Hooked is that the top-ranked players must never look at their phones. Therefore, they don't know they're winning, because the act of checking your score would knock you off the list. So if you're reading this, Jordyn121874, keep up the good work! You're ranked second.

Checky doesn't have a built-in game, but it does work to moderate your phone habit by being totally useless and crashing all the time. If Checky were a college student, it would be a guy who's a 23-year-old sophomore.

Moment is by far the most elegant and detailed way to track your phone habit. I didn't venture into the paid version, but in exchange for some light data-mining Moment will tell you how you fare against other users. I dare not ask why Moment needs to know how many dogs I own, but in return for that information I learned that the average Moment user spends 3 hours and 57 minutes per day on the phone. After two weeks, my average clocked in around two hours. In other words, I don't have a problem after all! Or at least, my problem's only half as bad as yours.

And Moment isn't totally accurate, either. For instance, it scolded me for five hours of screen time on a day when I went skiing and used Waze on the drive. Likewise, when I go running and cue up Yo Gotti for some "Rake It Up," that counts the same as slack-jawed Facebook scrolling in the Dunkin' drive-through line. See, not all screen time is equal. If you're using your phone to encourage some form of exercise, such as skiing or rakin' it up, then more power to you. If you're using it to look at Kevin Federline's Instagram feed while your co-workers ask for the third time if you'd like to finish stitching up the patient, then you might have a problem.

But even with Moment looking over my shoulder, I found situations that justified unholstering the phone. After a friend's 40th birthday bash, my wife, Heather, and I were at the elevator at the hotel, ready to call it a night. Another couple pushed their way in with a luggage cart overflowing with small bags of snacks. Feeling compelled to explain, they told us that there was a vending machine convention at the hotel and they'd won a raffle. "Look at all this!" said the guy. "Want some chips? Take some chips." And he handed Heather some chips. "You like pretzels?" asked the woman, and she offloaded some pretzels. By the time we reached our floor, Heather looked like a human Cumby Farms snack aisle, bear-hugging bags of tortilla chips, pretzels and cookies. I took out my phone to document this event, because it's not every elevator ride that you make off with a stash of Late July Jalapeño Lime chips, which are like Cool Ranch Doritos' classier cousin.

I thought about posting one of these photos on social media, but then you might look at it. And maybe you'd comment. And maybe I'd respond to your comment, and then both of us would have squandered some part of our day that could be better spent doing literally almost anything else. So put your phone away. Unless, that is, you're reading this on your phone. In which case, I think you're fine. Just put it away before the plane starts taxiing, or you're going to get some really dirty looks from the co-pilot. ◆

Soroff On / Jamie Bissonnette

THE TOQUE DISHES ON YELP, BUILDING LEGOS AND TORO'S GLOBAL EXPANSION

JAMES BEARD AWARD-WINNING CHEF JAMIE BISSONNETTE, 40, was raised in Connecticut and earned his culinary arts degree from the Art Institute of Fort Lauderdale. He then spent several years cooking in Paris, San Francisco, New York and Phoenix, before settling in Boston. He opened Eastern Standard as executive chef in 2005, and three years later teamed up with business partner Ken Oringer to open Toro in the South End. The pair now own Toro in New York, Bangkok and Dubai, as well as the popular local spots Coppa and Little Donkey. A former vegan, Bissonnette's a champion of nose-to-tail cuisine and authored a cookbook on charcuterie. He also appeared on the Food Network's Chopped.

JONATHAN SOROFF: What do you think is the single most pronounced characteristic of all great chefs?
JAMIE BISSONNETTE: Passion for flavor and food, man. Just wanting to cook.

Do you personally butcher the pigs you cook? I butcher a pig once a week. I don't do all of it, but I do a lot. I love doing it. Butchering an animal might seem primal or like you're doing something really rustic or primitive, but when you know what you're doing, it's actually quite delicate, and it takes a deft touch. I like the duality of that.

Favorite organ meat? It might be skin. Who doesn't love crispy chicken skin, crispy turkey skin, crispy pork skin?

Favorite national cuisine for charcuterie? It's a toss-up. Spain for jamón Ibérico, France for pate, and Italy for mortadella.

Favorite food city in the U.S.? It's hard not to say New York, because you've got something from everywhere in the world. You can go to one borough and be in Little Uzbekistan, and then another and be in a Little Korea, or a Little Pakistan, so I guess I'd say New York for its vastness. As far as a concentrated place for creativity, I really like San Francisco and Chicago.

How about in the world? San Sebastián [Spain].

Three things all great restaurants have? A passionate staff, hard-working dishwashers and a great staff meal.

Biggest kitchen disaster you've ever had? Working brunch at Eastern Standard, and somebody had taken all the eggs when they came in and put them in the freezer, not realizing it, but then pulled them out. So I didn't realize that they'd been kinda frozen and kinda thawed, and they weren't frozen enough that the shells cracked, but they were thawed enough that the yolks wouldn't stay together. I couldn't crack an egg to save my life. The yolks just kept breaking. It was the longest three hours of my life.

Thoughts on review sites like Yelp? Hey, man, they all serve a purpose. You've gotta know when to listen and when to ignore it. Like if I'm walking down the street and somebody says, "Nice haircut," and I can tell they're being sarcastic, I'm not gonna think twice about it. But if some guy stops me and says, "Dude, what's up with your hair?" or some chick is like, "Hey, your hair looks terrible," I might stop and look in the mirror. I might not know who they are. I might not know what gives them the right to tell me that, but if multiple people tell me my hair looks terrible, it doesn't matter what their credentials are. It's time to look at my hair. And I think that's what Yelp can be if you're responsible with it.

"I couldn't crack an egg to save my life. The yolks just kept breaking. It was the longest three hours of my life."

Thoughts on restaurant critics? They've been around as long as restaurants have, and I think it's great. I like it when there's the consistency of someone reviewing things, and you get to know their personal taste. A responsible person reading their review is going to know—if they read their review every week—what Pete Wells likes, or what Devra First doesn't like, and you can understand it. You can say, "Well, I know MC Slim never gets excited about this kind of restaurant, but this is more his thing." Knowing that there's consistency in it, you can learn a lot from their opinions. I think it's good.

How much time do you spend in Bangkok and Dubai? Bangkok, a couple of times a year. Dubai, we've only been open since September, so I was there for two weeks when we opened, and I was there for a week in October. I'll probably go back to both in late February or early March, but it's not like Boston or New York. I'm in New York constantly.

Were there things you had to tweak for those cities? Yeah, but there were things we had to tweak when we opened in Cambridge. There's always something you don't expect. You do something one way in one place, and you go somewhere else and you have to change it. We don't have any pork on the menu in Dubai. In Bangkok, we realized that the Thai palette is very particular, and some of the things you and I might perceive as a really good classic flavor, they don't. Take a tortilla espanola. The combination of onions, potatoes, olive oil, salt and egg, they thought was really boring and salty, because they use either fish sauce or dried seafood for their salt component, so we realized we had to add more texture and spice to balance out some of the Western flavors.

What compelled you and Ken to open restaurants in such far-flung locales? Ken and I both love Bangkok and Thailand, and Ken had looked at the possibility of doing something there years and years ago. The person who's our partner there was coming to Toro in Boston a lot when he went to B.U., and he came to New York when we opened. He kept saying, "My dad and I have this property. We're doing restaurants there. We want to do a Toro." We thought it could be really fun and interesting and a great experience, and it just worked out. Similar thing with Dubai. A guy approached us and said, "We'd really love to do a Toro in Dubai." It's a really fun space.

Tell me a secret about Ken Oringer. He hates eggs.

What do you do to relax? I collect records, so I go home and I like to sit and listen to them. Right now, I'm focusing on jazz. And I build Star Wars Lego sets. I turn off my phone, my computer, and I listen to records and build Legos.

What's the location you want to conquer next? I love Boston and the expansion of it. I love how it's starting to not just be one little area. It used to be like Cambridge was hard to get people to go to. Now, people go to Somerville or South Boston or East Boston. I love that. So I think it would be great to maybe do a restaurant in one of the newer neighborhoods. ◆

THE MEAT HOOK

For charcuterie connoisseur Joshua Smith, pigging out is a good thing

BY HANNAH SHEINBERG PHOTOS BY HOLLY RIKE

CHEF JOSHUA SMITH HAS A PRETTY FULL PLATE THESE DAYS.

For starters, he operates his five-year-old charcuterie hot spot in Waltham, Moody's Delicatessen and Provisions. He's expanding his restaurant adjacent to Moody's, the Backroom, by adding an oyster bar, and he's opening a taco-barbeque joint next door—a nod to his southern heritage. In December, he introduced a second Moody's location in the heart of Back Bay, and by the end of this year, he's hoping to open an outpost of the Backroom in Napa, California. Then there's his 10,000-square-foot meat-processing plant, New England Charcuterie—which he fondly refers to as the Death Star—that supplies cured creations to restaurants across the city, from Townsman to Area Four.

His influence is everywhere, but don't mistake Smith for a celebrity chef.

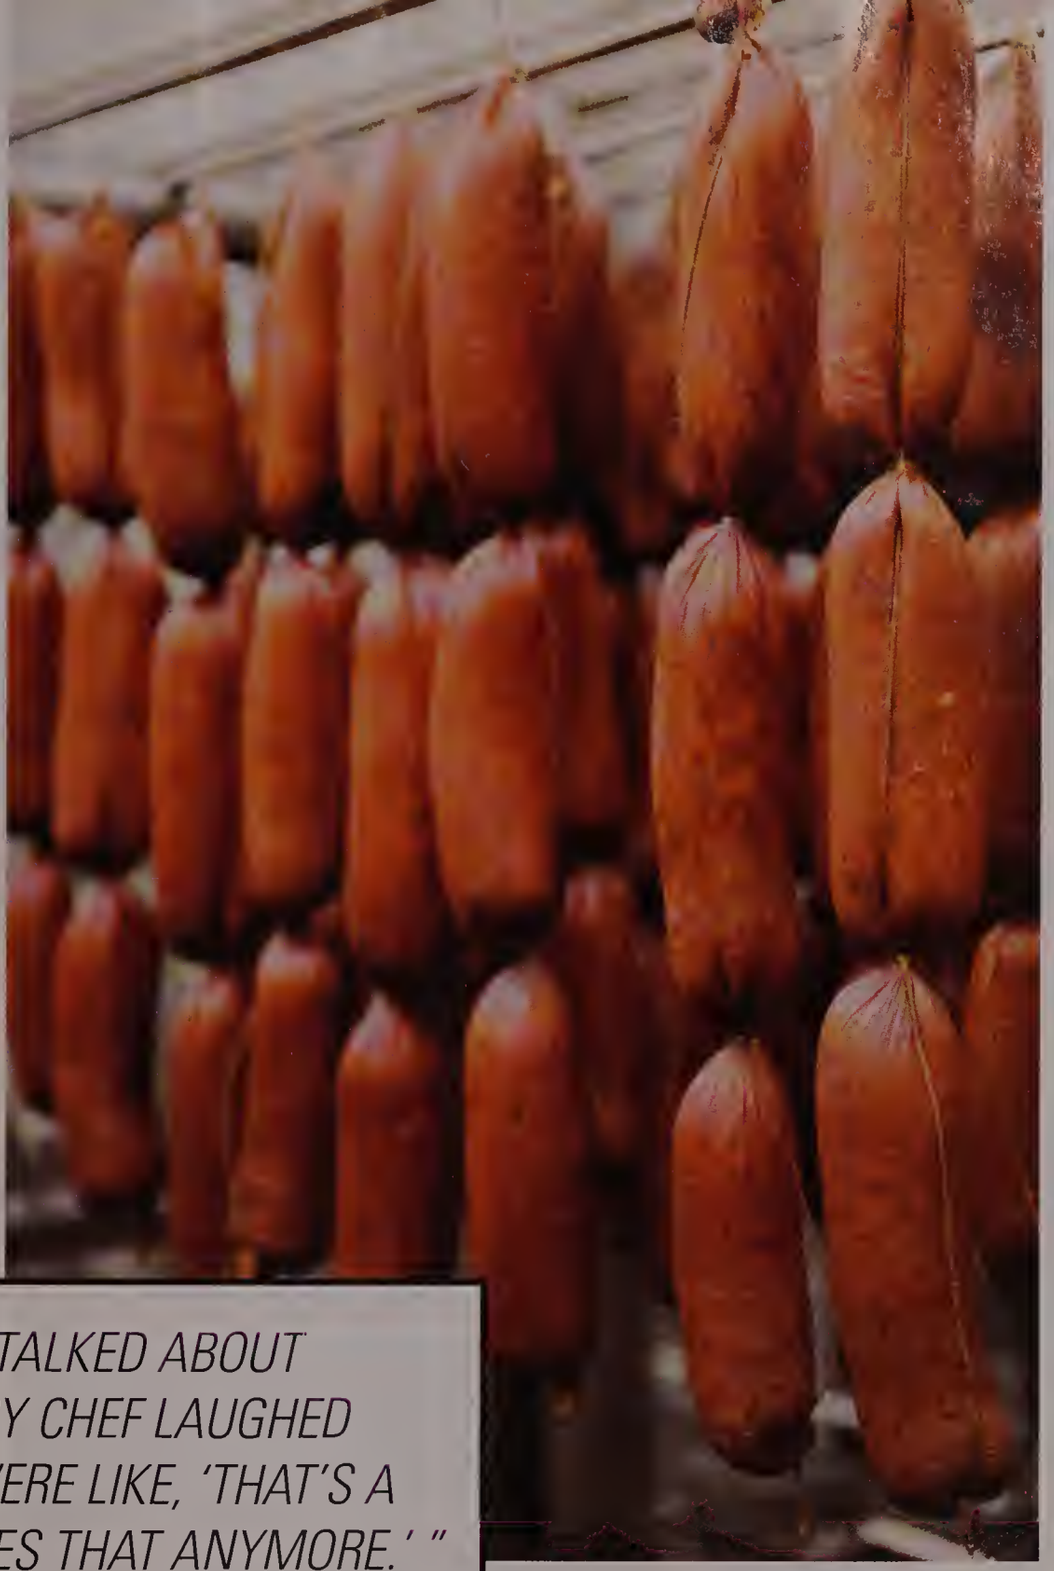
"I've said no to the Food Network more times than anything. They've asked for Top Chef, Beat Bobby Flay, Guy's Grocery Games—I couldn't care fucking less," Smith says. "I don't want it to be about me. I want it to be about my team."

When it comes to his business and 90-plus staff members, Smith says there are no small parts. When someone calls in sick, he'll step in to deliver the platters of sandwiches or repair the custom-made ovens.

"One day, I'm scrubbing toilets or taking out the trash or whatever, and the next day I'm sitting on the 55th floor of the Hancock Tower having a meeting about raising $3 million to do the next project. Nothing's above or beneath me."

Smith's distaste of the Food Network is particularly ironic because family dinners—something he tries to make it home for at least three nights a week with his wife, Tracy, and 10-year-old son, Tyler—are essentially an episode of Chopped. During father-son grocery store runs, Tyler picks out random ingredients that he finds interesting, and Smith then attempts to create a cohesive meal with their haul.

Just like dad, Tyler's a big meat-eater—steak or lamb are his top selections—and he's also no stranger to how the sausage gets made, so to speak. "Tyler's seen the farm where we raise our pigs, he's seen them slaughtered and he eats the bacon that those pigs yielded. So he's very familiar with the food chain."



SMITH'S first forays into the food industry took a much different path. At age 15, he was sweeping the floors of a McDonald's in his hometown of Charlotte, North Carolina. He'd left home around that same time after his parents divorced, living on his own and working his way up the Golden Arches ladder to the egg station.

Instead of finishing high school, he washed dishes at a local restaurant before earning a spot on the prep line to cut chicken for tenders. "I identified with all the cooks, and it was this camaraderie that I just craved coming from a broken home," Smith says. After dinner service ended, he would nap in the booths before meeting his friend, Crazy Steve, who'd pay him $50 to clean the kitchen's hoods and stoves. Then he'd get ready for the morning shift.

At that time, any extra cash went toward Grateful Dead concert tickets. "We'd go to these shows and sell beers or grilled cheeses in the parking lot and make a few bucks and buy some weed or whatever." (The Grateful Dead is Smith's soundtrack of choice for the Backroom's Sunday brunch service.)

His first taste of charcuterie came at age 19 when he was working at Dean & Deluca in North Carolina. "The butcher didn't show up one day because he drank a lot, and [the chef] told me to go work in the butcher shop." Even though he had only ever worked with chicken breasts, Smith immediately felt at home behind the gourmet meat counter. "The general manager of the store was a classic American butcher, so he showed me how

"EVERYWHERE I WENT, I TALKED ABOUT CHARCUTERIE AND EVERY CHEF LAUGHED AT ME BECAUSE THEY WERE LIKE, 'THAT'S A DYING ART, NOBODY DOES THAT ANYMORE.' "

Americans cut [their meat] and the French chef showed me how the French cut for their cuisine," Smith says. "So I got a real OG lesson on how to set a beautiful butcher case, and how to manage it."

And then just like his favorite jam band, Smith took his act across the country.

He hitchhiked his way to Seattle, ready to start slicing meats for the masses. "Taking the Greyhound bus, catching a ride, meeting someone, living on couches—I didn't have anything; I had only what I could carry on my back."

When he got to Washington, he discovered that charcuterie was old news. "Everywhere I went, I talked about charcuterie and every chef laughed at me because they were like, 'That's a dying art, nobody does that anymore.' "

Smith didn't care. He cooked for 1,200-person banquets at the Four Seasons Olympic Hotel, catered parties at Bill Gates' house and worked the cheese and charcuterie counter at a Thriftway.

California came next, where Smith worked at two local golf courses, whipping up more than 200 pastrami sandwiches a day. His take on the Katz's specialty? Instead of steaming the meat, he fries it to render all the fat. He then worked as chef de cuisine for a group of restaurants in the Lake Tahoe area. That's where he met his wife, World Cup skier Tracy Jolles, and they eventually moved to her home state of Massachusetts, where Smith found work at the Four Seasons in Boston.

IN November 2012, Smith finally got to open his own deli dreamland, Moody's, where salami and pork legs dangle from the rafters like chandeliers and the butcher cases are stocked with pate, premium cold cuts and spicy sausages.

But to Smith, Moody's is about more than just the meat, though there is plenty of that. It's about the neighborhood hangout spot that a deli environment fosters.

"People are very habitual about their breakfast and lunch. They get into their routine and that's what makes them comfortable and happy," Smith says. "For me, that's so special. To have a place where you can see the same people over and over again, and have an impact on your community. That was all I really ever wanted."

When Smith gets his hair cut nearby on Moody Street, he brings lunch to the salon. If the deli's power goes out (thanks to the main street's antiquated power lines), the pub across the way has offered to store Moody's perishables in its fridges. The Backroom mostly serves domestic wines, since there's an Italian restaurant down the street that already has a comprehensive European wine list. And every morning, Smith has a proper sit-down meal—a mix of eggs, smoked salmon, avocado, jalapeños and the occasional dollop of caviar—with his "Breakfast Club," a crew of local plumbers, electricians and landscapers that chat about last night's game over eggs. The Gino, a breakfast wrap on the menu that consists of ham, scrambled eggs, American cheese and spicy ketchup, was created after the eatery's electrician, Gino, regularly ordered the combo.

"When I started, I didn't think Moody's was going to be as big as it got. It was only supposed to be this small little deli where we made charcuterie in the back and we sold it in the front," Smith says. "It totally took on a life of its own."

> "MY DAYS ARE SO SLAMMED THAT IT'S NICE TO ESCAPE AND RETREAT INTO SOME ALTERNATE PLACE FOR A FEW HOURS."

So how does he cope with the craziness of running his own burgeoning restaurant empire?

Cappuccinos help. As do Boulder and Brady, Smith's two golden retrievers who accompany him on delivery runs and have a dog bed and toys at his New England Charcuterie office. And when he really needs to get away from work for a bit, he and a fellow "geeky" co-worker have a steak dinner, split a bottle of wine and go catch a superhero movie. "My days are so slammed that it's nice to escape and retreat into some alternate place for a few hours," says Smith, who buys the movie tickets a month ahead of time, usually for the Thursday night advanced screenings.

Smith finds a lot of comfort in planning ahead. Before he seriously sliced into the charcuterie game, he had already decided on his retirement arrangements by the time he turned 20. The plan includes a lot of pigs, unsurprisingly, and a place in Chamonix, France, where he can walk to the charming town center to share plates of prosciutto with friends and shop for small-batch groceries.

"I'd hang out with the guy who makes the cheese, and I'd be guy who makes the meat, and then there's the guy who makes the bread—just that real communal love for food and family. The town would get together and everyone would eat food together."

Aside from the whole French chateau element, Smith already has the trimmings of his lifelong goal. He's building his own version of a town center right in Moody's, constantly chatting with the locals who meander in for their morning coffee. The restaurant's chef and baker, Luke Fetbroth, is the guy who makes the bread and some of the cheese (as well as the chocolate-frosted and bacon-topped doughnuts). The community comes together to dine on simple, classic dishes that serve up a sense of nostalgia, nestled between two slices of rye.

And most importantly, Joshua Smith is the man who makes the meat. ◆

FIRST COURSE

From fudged resumes to severed tendons, five chefs recall how they broke into the restaurant business.

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

Rebecca Arnold at Pain D'Avignon

REBECCA ARNOLD of Whole Heart Provisions wasn't always destined for the kitchen. The veggie virtuoso's first taste of the restaurant industry was in 2008 as a hostess for the Boston Renaissance Hotel's former eatery 606 Congress, even though she initially applied for a line cook position. Armed with a culinary degree but no previous kitchen experience, the 21-year-old Arnold learned as much about food as possible during her four-month stint at the front of house, forming a relationship with executive chef Toby Hill, who she would later follow to Hyannis' Pain D'Avignon. "I begged him to let me work in the kitchen for about a month, and they finally transferred me over to the garde manger station," Arnold says.

Once entrenched in the culinary quarters, Arnold was on her way to learning the trade. On slow nights, the kitchen staff would compete to create dishes featuring a secret ingredient in a game modeled after the Food Network series Iron Chef. In a round highlighting raspberries, Arnold whipped up a pork chop with a raspberry mostarda. "I was very new to the kitchen in those days...so I had no idea really how to pan sear a pork chop and get a nice golden crust on it, but I got to head over to the hot station and give it my best," Arnold says.

During her year-and-a-half at 606 Congress, Arnold learned many kitchen tips and tricks, such as balancing flavors and textures with acid, crunch and spice as well as treating your staff like family. "Everyone is so important to the running of a smooth kitchen—from prep cooks, line cooks and dishwashers to sous-chefs and managers," Arnold says. "Those people are the ones who make the restaurant shine. If you treat them with respect, it will be returned tenfold."

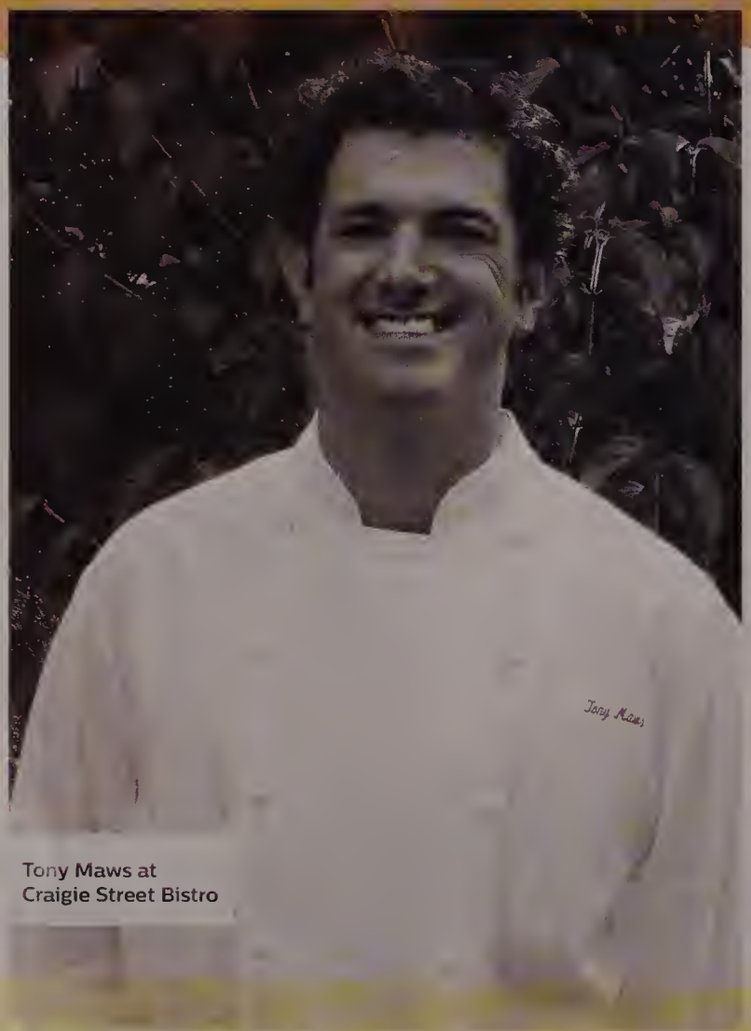
By the time she was graduating from Boston College in 2003, ASIA MEI had an inkling she was unlikely to use her honors degree in economics to find a desk job. Mei had spent a couple of months working at a friend's family restaurant, Naha Cafe in the Fenway area, where she rolled sushi, washed dishes and worked the grill. But she took a chance on the day of her BC graduation that charted her course to her current job as chef/owner of Moonshine 152: Mei skipped out on the ceremony, instead popping into Hamersley's to see if there were any job openings.



"I had my normal resume, which was pretty decent, but my 'cooking resume' was essentially my name and phone number. I had called the restaurant the week before and been told that they weren't hiring or looking for anyone, but I was determined to get a job in a four-star restaurant," Mei says. "When I got to the desk, the hostess mentioned that someone had just put in their notice the day before, and 10 minutes later I was talking to one of Boston's best chefs ever."

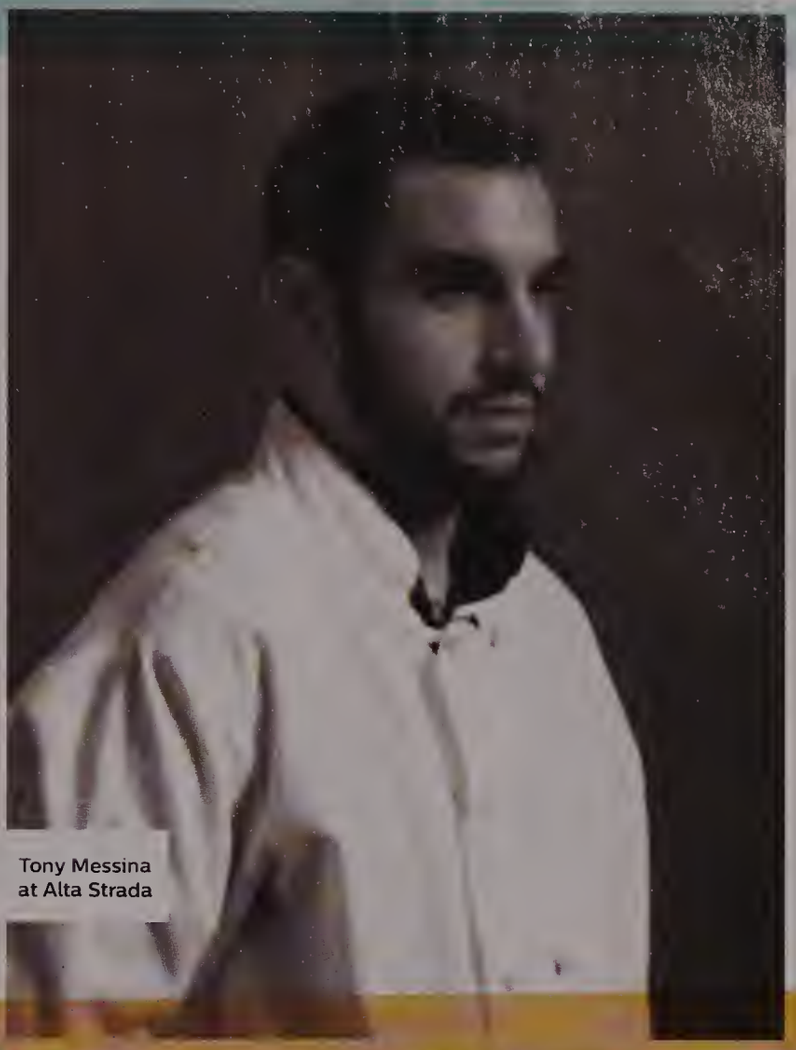
Gordon Hamersley had her toss on a chef's jacket and hop on the hot line for a tryout in his famed open kitchen that very night. The job was hers, and eventually she worked her way up to sous-chef, where she further honed her work ethic. She recalls running the hot line one weekend when all of her more senior co-workers were at a wedding in New York. Mei severed two tendons right before that Saturday dinner service, but she worked the grill station and finished her shift before heading to the emergency room.

"Hamersley's was just the sort of place and kitchen that inspired a die-hard sense of dedication like that," Mei says. "[People have] always respected and honored his being on the hot line, night after night, always there and leading the team. I'm the same way. When you love what you do, believe in the food you make and dedicate yourself to every step in the process to get it to the people in your neighborhood, then people see and taste that."

Asia Mei and her co-workers at Hamersley's

Tony Maws at Craigie Street Bistro

TONY MAWS, chef/owner of Cambridge's Craigie on Main and Somerville's Kirkland Tap & Trotter, has a slew of accolades under his belt—including a James Beard Award—but like many of us, he landed his first job with a little resume fudging. In 1985, his parents pushed him to get a summer gig. "There were a few restaurants and inns around our family's house so I sent my heavily embellished resume off and quickly got a call from the Beach Plum Inn," Maws says. His first job was as a dishwasher at the Martha's Vineyard inn and restaurant, where the then-15-year-old Maws discovered his love of working in the kitchen, with all the madness and camaraderie (and leftover lobster tails) that came with it. "I played hockey, and this reminded me of the adrenaline I felt out on the ice with the team," he says. "A very immediate rush, challenge and gratification."



After college, he couldn't shake his passion for the kitchen, and in 1994 he decided to apply to East Coast Grill, where Chris Schlesinger hired him both as a part-time prep cook and a part-time garde manger at the Blue Room. His early days at East Coast Grill, alongside chef Andy Husbands, were packed with epic prep lists. "I was beyond lost, but I tucked my tail between my legs, kept my head down and went to work," Maws says.

When a spot on the line opened up at the Blue Room, he moved there full-time and learned more than a few lessons that still stick with him. "I remember the time I burnt the shit out of a duck and still served it," he says. "The woman who ordered it promptly sent it right back, and when chef Mark Hall saw, he lit me up in front of the entire dining room. He just destroyed me. And I never served food that wasn't perfect ever again."

TONY MESSINA—executive chef/partner of UNI in Back Bay—has worked in some of the most prestigious kitchens in Boston, but his culinary career had a much humbler beginning: working at Spinelli's catering company in Eastie. His uncle got him the job when he was just 14 years old after Messina showed an early fascination with food, often spending the majority of his time cooking for family and helping prepare traditional Italian dishes in his grandparents' kitchen. Messina worked for the catering company throughout high school until 1999—despite a somewhat rocky start. "I would constantly get yelled at," Messina says. "Eventually, I learned all of the food pickups and I was able to work every station."

Messina was drawn to the fast-paced nature of being in the kitchen and, despite leaving the industry for a few years, ultimately decided to pursue his passion for the culinary world, shucking oysters at Legal Sea Foods before joining the team at Alta Strada as a line cook and head server. "I missed the speed and pressure of it," Messina says. "Had I not been acquainted with it through my first job, I may not have gone into cooking at all."

He continued his gastronomic journey at the Cambridge Culinary School in 2009, and in 2010 Messina joined the opening staff at Menton as chef de partie. All of that led him to Ken Oringer's original UNI in 2012. "The most important thing I learned was to be persistent," Messina says. "This lesson rings true today for my staff. The cooks that want to learn will push their way into learning new things."

Tony Messina at Alta Strada

David Bazirgan and his mother at Galleria Italiana

Even today, Bambara chef DAVID BAZIRGAN remains shocked that he didn't get fired from his first cooking gig in Boston. As a 21-year-old at Cambridge School of Culinary Arts, he landed a job in 1995 as garde manger at Barbara Lynch's Galleria Italiana, thanks to a recommendation from his instructor, Susan Logozzo. After he'd worked there for a little while, Bazirgan was roasting portabella mushrooms on the top rack of a convection oven. He had loaded up the dish with oil, when Lynch went to check on it.

"The scalding oil burned the shit out of her arm. How I kept my job, I have no idea," he says. "But it definitely taught me a thing or two about proportions and safety."

Those weren't the only things Bazirgan learned from Lynch, whom he kept in touch with even while working on the West Coast. He points to the unwieldy 20-item antipasta della casa that he had to learn how to manage. And he also says Lynch helped him gain an appreciation for seasonal ingredients and fresh pasta—something he still makes at Bambara. For a kid who started working as a dishwasher in Newburyport at age 13, and who was "terrible" in high school, a career in the kitchen became his best path.

"I credit Barbara for most of the lessons I've learned as a chef," he says. "Read as much as possible. Eat out whenever possible and push yourself to learn, learn, learn."

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Nathan Tavares

IT'S ELECTRIC AcousticaElectronica is a sensory-stunning mashup of opposites. The immersive theatrical show blends past and present, classical with sizzling electronic dance music and a night on the dance floor with a trip to the theater. Grab a drink to start as performers mingle with the crowd while in-character before the time-hopping, storyline-driven performance. The show first transports the audience into the past to meet characters of the arts—including Pierrot Lunaire and Odette the Swan—before whisking the icons into the here and now where they struggle with identity in a dazzling new world. After the show, hit the dance floor till 2 am with beats by DJ Danny Satori. Sparks fly when AcousticaElectronica lights up the stage at Oberon on Feb. 2. / Nathan Tavares

MOVIES

PADDINGTON 2 ★★★★ You might not generally look to a family film for arch commentary on the modern state of immigration in these post-Brexit days, but director Paul King's second instant classic about a talking, marmalade-loving bear who's settled into London living after leaving the jungles of "darkest Peru" provides it nonetheless. When King's first adaptation of Michael Bond's beloved Paddington Bear books gently ribbed British audiences' anxieties about the growing refugee crisis three years ago, it was simply subtext for the delightful yarn the director had cooked up for the polite, furry little mammal's big-screen bow. But in the era of Trump, it doesn't matter that our pint-sized émigré hero (once again voiced by Ben Whishaw and given magical, computer-animated form in a live-action world) has successfully integrated into a multicultural neighborhood after being taken in by the kindly Brown family. Falsely imprisoned for the theft of a rare pop-up book he'd been saving up to buy as a gift for his beloved Aunt Lucy (voiced by Imelda Staunton), Paddington spends much of the film behind bars. His adopted family—led by stuffy risk analyst Henry (Downton Abbey's Hugh Bonneville) and his sunny wife, children's book illustrator Mary (The Shape of Water's Sally Hawkins)—does all they can to prove his innocence, while the real culprit—dandy actor and master of disguise Phoenix Buchanan (Hugh Grant, never better)—roams free. If this sounds a bit dark, bear in mind that Paddington 2 is never less than delightful, embracing the sweetness of Bond's source material. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.) / Brett Michel

Reviews by Brett Michel & Edited by Cathryn Haight

Den of Thieves* ★★★ You'd never guess that a crime thriller opening in the dumping ground of January and starring Gerard Butler would be any good. The entire notion of such a project succeeding sounds about as plausible as this film's heist at the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve. Still, while writer/director Christian Gudegast (co-writer of Butler vehicle London Has Fallen and son of The Young and the Restless' Eric Braeden) may have cooked up a warmed-over version of Michael Mann's Heat, it ends up tastier than expected. Beefier-than-usual Butler does his best Mel Gibson impression as "Big Nick" Flanagan, the perennially hungover head of a hard-boiled unit within the LA Sheriff's Department, one that's determined to take down a group of former military ex-cons led by Merriman (Pablo Schreiber, Liev's half-brother, making a strong impression), who's clearly jazzed by the prospect of robbing the federal government. out Merriman's titular den of thieves is right-hand man Levi (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) and new driver Donnie (O'Shea Jackson Jr., the son of Ice Cube, best known for portraying his dad in Straight Outta Compton). Making his debut behind the camera, Gudegast proves adept at staging action. Sure, his shootouts don't quite hit the Michael Mann target, but driven by Cliff Martinez's pulsating score, they still provide a visceral thrill that's only occasionally let down by the film's long length. And despite a number of narrative implausibilities along the way, the film's coda delivers an unexpectedly satisfying kick. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Film Stars Don't Die in Liverpool ★★1/2 Unless they're avid fans of Turner Classic Movies, most modern audiences probably don't remember Gloria Grahame's 9-minute-long, Oscar-winning role in 1952's The Bad and the Beautiful, though they'd likely recall her even briefer turn as Violet, the bad-girl blonde who laughs at the wide-eyed romanticism of George Bailey (Jimmy Stewart) in the holiday classic It's a Wonderful Life. Despite her Academy Award, the actress never enjoyed the success of, say, Marilyn Monroe. But like that iconic bombshell, Grahame also died young. After numerous failed marriages, she died of cancer in 1981 at the age of 58, after spending time in the Liverpool home of Peter Turner's parents. In the new film by Paul McGuigan (director of Wicker Park) that's based on Turner's memoir, the small-time actor who is 30 years Grahame's junior is played by Billy Elliot's Jamie Bell. But the real appeal of this film that details Grahame's final days is with the actress who plays her: Annette Bening. Luminous as always, you can't take your eyes off her, despite a game turn by Bell as the man who forges a strong bond with Grahame during her final love affair. A May-December romance is nothing new in Hollywood, though it's nice to see the roles reversed, with an older woman seducing a much younger man. Still, one wishes the sentimental film rose to the standards of Bening—and Grahame. (At Kendall Square.)

Hostiles ★★★ Director Scott Cooper has a knack for getting good work from his performers, whether it's Johnny Depp inhabiting Whitey Bulger in Black Mass or Jeff Bridges strumming his way toward an Oscar in Crazy Heart. But for the most part, Cooper's films have not been that memorable from a narrative standpoint. The same was true for 2013's Out of the Furnace, his overwrought drama drawn from spare parts of The Deer Hunter. But now reteaming with one of that film's stars, Christian Bale, he's come the closest to hitting the target of the American mythology he's been aiming for. It helps that Hostiles, a Western based on an unproduced manuscript by the late Donald E. Stewart (a writer on Paramount's first three Jack Ryan pictures), features a compelling story. Set in 1892, the tale focuses on Capt. Joseph J. Blocker (Bale), a haunted soldier who's seen (and taken part in) too much bloodshed. Harboring a deep hatred for Native Americans, the reluctant Blocker nevertheless agrees to escort a former enemy, cancer-stricken Cheyenne war chief Yellow Hawk (Dances with Wolves' Wes Studi) and his family (Adam Beach, Q'orianka Kilcher and Xavier Horsechief) from New Mexico's Fort Berringer to the plains of Montana, where he can die on his tribal lands. The perilous journey sees a tremendous amount of death, as they pick up a shellshocked war widow (Rosamund Pike) and fend off hostile Comanche. It may not be Unforgiven, but that's a forgivable sin in this better-than-expected drama. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle ★★★ Jake Kasdan's sequel to 1995's Jumanji seems about 20 years too late, especially after the untimely passing of that film's star, Robin Williams, a few years ago. But rather than a direct continuation, Jumanji: Welcome to the Jungle is more of a reboot. Rather than catch up with Kirsten Dunst's Judy Shepherd or Bonnie Hunt's Sarah Whittle, we're introduced to an entirely new cast of high school-aged characters—nerdy video gamer Spencer (Alex Wolff), football player Fridge (Ser'Darius Blain), shy wallflower Martha (Morgan Turner) and self-possessed beauty Bethany (Madison Iseman)—each who end up in detention, which is where they encounter a dust-covered copy of Jumanji. No longer a board game, writer and illustrator Chris Van Allsburg's creation has been transformed into a '90s-era video game. After booting up the 16-bit cartridge, they're transported to a magical, deadly jungle that looks a lot like Hawaii when they select their characters—only they inhabit new bodies, which is where the film derives much of its humor. Spencer has been transformed into a muscle-bound adventurer played by Dwayne Johnson, Fridge is now a much shorter (and hyper) zoologist played by Kevin Hart, Martha is a Lara Croft-like badass played by Karen Gillan and Bethany has become, well, Jack Black. A little body-swapping goes a long way as our heroes must learn to work together if they're to survive the deadly game before losing the last of their three lives. Lacking the surrealist highs of the original, it's nevertheless a pleasant diversion. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Maze Runner: The Death Cure ★★ Based on a series of young adult novels by James Dashner, the Maze Runner movies haven't made much of a cultural mark, though Wes Ball's first film was rather enjoyable when it opened in 2014—for as long as it remained inside the titular mysterious, walled-in labyrinth anyway. Once the heroic amnesiac Thomas (American Assassin's Dylan O'Brien) and his fellow, equally memory-deficient young "Gladers" escaped from the maze during the film's third act, the plot was revealed to have something to do with a plague-ravaged, post-apocalyptic society—similar to the one in the Divergent series of books and film adaptations. And not only was Ball's sequel (2015's Maze Runner: The Scorch Trials) forgettable, the plots and characters of the Maze Runner and Divergent universes are easily conflated with the relatively same cheap look and at least one actress (Rosa Salazar) playing gun-toting tough gals in both. Nevertheless, it's clear that former visual effects artist Ball has steadily grown as a director, since The Death Cure includes some action sequences that are well put together. Now, if he can get his hands on a decent script—including characters worth caring about—he might just make something memorable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Phantom Thread ★★★★ Reynolds Woodcock, the fictional couturier played by 60-year-old Daniel Day-Lewis in his second collaboration with writer/director Paul Thomas Anderson (There Will Be Blood), is a man who needs women in his life. While the ghost of the mother, who taught Reynolds his trade, remains close to his heart (he's secretly stitched locks of her hair into the breast of his jacket), it's his sister Cyril (Lesley Manville) who handles the 1950s affairs of London's House of Woodcock—sometimes literally, as when she steps in to terminate her hypersensitive younger brother's short-lived relationships with the live-in lovelies who briefly serve as his muses. Reynolds is a man ruled by routine, so it doesn't take him long to meet a new paramour after Cyril has dismissed his latest companion during the film's opening moments. Traveling to his country estate, Reynolds catches the eye of clumsy young waitress Alma (34-year-old Luxembourgian Vicky Krieps) during a stop at a seaside cafe. To say more would do a disservice to the devilish pleasures derived from watching the plot unfold, but it becomes clear that Reynolds has met his match. Shockingly, the chameleonic Day-Lewis has said that this will be his final role. If so, then he's gone out on a high note. Almost as shocking, the little-known Krieps has accomplished the unfathomable, going toe-to-toe with the three-time Oscar winner. This is also a credit to Anderson's exceptional script, which pays homage to the gothic romance of Alfred Hitchcock's Rebecca (1940), from its midcentury glamour to the triangular dynamic of its characters. Prepare to be hemmed in. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Seaport, Somerville and in the suburbs.

The Post ★★★ Steven Spielberg takes a crack at staging a star-driven, newspaper yarn like His Girl Friday, setting it mostly during 1971 and populating it with actors like Meryl Streep and Tom Hanks. Streep plays Washington Post owner and publisher Katharine Graham as she prepares the paper for a public offering she hopes will strengthen the publication in its quest for national prominence; the Watergate scandal that made the paper's reputation had yet to happen, but executive editor Bill Bradlee (Hanks, who's good, but not as good as Jason Robards in All the President's Men) sensed a big story was cooking at The New York Times. And indeed, the Grey Lady was about to break the Pentagon Papers: 7,000 unnumbered documents commissioned by Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara (Bruce Greenwood) exposing a massive government cover-up. The papers had been smuggled out of the Rand Corporation in Santa Monica by defense analyst Daniel Ellsberg (Matthew Rhys of FX's The Americans), an old friend of Post editor Ben Bagdikian (Better Call Saul's Bob Odenkirk), who's able to get a copy of the papers after the Times is blocked by a federal court injunction from continuing its own reports. Risking their careers—as well as potential jail time—Graham and Bradlee have to decide whether to push ahead and publish their own version of the biggest story in the nation. Ever the showman, Spielberg's not working in a subtle gear here—and he's not helped by a script that could use a few more drafts—but it's hard to think of a movie that's more of the moment than this one. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

HEALING IN HARMONY

Singing in the car has a whole new meaning for folk musicians Joe Purdy and Amber Rubarth, who star in the recently released independent film American Folk. The flick follows two troubadours who find solace in their music and in each other while on a cross-country road trip to New York after their East Coast-bound plane is grounded in California in the wake of Sept. 11. Much like their film counterparts, Purdy and Rubarth are on a musical odyssey touring the nation in support of the soundtrack, for which they penned five original songs that combine folk traditions with a youthful flair. Buckle up and hit the road when the pair brings their mountain sound to Brighton Music Hall on Feb. 1. / Imogen O'Brien

GRIM REAPER

A time before Netflix and Hulu seems like a scary thought. But Mountain Goats singer/songwriter John Darnielle ups the ante with his new novel, Universal Harvester. Jeremy, the manager of a '90s-era video store in Nevada, Iowa, is notified by customers that some movies have been taped over with menacing footage, most showing people in distress at locations eerily similar to his small town. Darnielle weaves in other parallel plot threads, one in the present and one in the '70s, to bolster the mystery and piece together a hypnotic account of how sinister behavior permeates everyday life. Listen to the frontman/novelist at Brookline Booksmith on Feb. 9. / Cathryn Haight

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

DRIVING CRAZY

MISSIVES FROM THE JET SET

NOTHING A BOARD-CERTIFIED SHRINK COULDN'T DO

When a billionaire invites you to his airplane hangar to hear a Rock & Roll Hall of Famer perform, there's only one answer: What time?

To benefit his nonprofit, Music Drives Us, Ernie Boch Jr. hosted a blowout of biblical proportions at his Norwood airplane hangar, where his newly pimped-out jet was on display and Aerosmith's Joe Perry brought down the house. The evening attracted the likes of Boch's sister, Donna, music industry bigwig Clarence Barnes and his stunning wife, Jamie, blond bombshell Joanie Miller Friedman and her adoring other half, Alan, rabid Patriots fan Stephen Miller, advertising and radio giant Bruce Mittman with his wife, Ellen, songwriter Johnny A., medical device giant Tony Arrigo and his wife, Joyce, news anchor Gene Lavanchy, Perry's son, Aaron, former Patriots linebacker Rob Ninkovich, former Patriots tackle Matt Light with the flawless Susie, gorgeous pop star Ayla Brown and her mother, Gail Huff (just back from New Zealand, where her husband is the U.S. ambassador), WAAF bigmouth Greg Hill, Open House Party host John Garabedian, big-haired rocker Hirsh Gardner, blue-blooded impresario Joe Spaulding and the incomparable Joyce, and one woman who made the trenchant observation, "There are no gay bars on Nantucket."

Despite the fact that airplane hangars don't exactly have the world's best acoustics, Perry's performance was off the chain, while passed apps like Kobe beef sliders kept everyone from getting too tipsy from the free-flowing (and top-shelf) hooch.

The evening's most amusing moment: A single man asked a friend to fix him up with a particular woman, and then added, "When she says no, ask her why. I'm trying to figure out what's wrong with me."

NOW THAT IT'S LEGAL

Anyone who says Boston's arts scene is provincial should have been at POSSIBLE, a party hosted by white-hot artist/gallery owner David Guerra at his SoWa space, AREA.

Billed as a "party to ignite what can be," the evening raised money for the Women's Inn (New England's largest emergency shelter for women) and offered an immersive, interactive and all-around thought-provoking experience. On hand: puckish choreographer Ilya Vidrin, handsome troubadour Lucas Phillips, hunky painter Tristan Govignon, dapper lensman Zach Lanoue, cocktail artist Lexi LaGuerre, glass artist Eric Schwartz, Mass Innovation Labs head honcho Amrit Chaudhuri, hot ginge Nick Medvescek, bespectacled hipster Clint Baclawski, video game developer David Su and his aptly named S.O., Dominique Star, London-based designer Henrique Ghersi, Breaking Forms bandmates Nicole L'Huillier and Juan Necochea, bearded stud muffin Sam Jennings, and numerous other young, good-looking creative types.

In addition to delicious cocktails and nibbly things, there was the chance to ogle the artwork on the walls (which led to two people speculating on the body parts referenced in one of the paintings), as well as the opportunity to help make it. Murmurations, which utilized Polaroids of guests that they put on a wall and connected to others, explored the art of emergent networks. Meanwhile, an interactive sound installation courtesy of the geniuses at the MIT Media Lab created a sonic landscape in which guests entered their resolutions, hopes, plans or predictions for the New Year and transformed the text into a melody. Guests also left with a piece by artist Alicia Rodríguez Alvisa.

Lest this all sound too high-minded and abstract, bear in mind the following, overheard by the bar:

"How much weed did you smoke before coming here?"

"Just a few puffs of the stuff I grew in my backyard. It's killer." ◆

For over 35 years, Boston's most eligible bachelors and bachelorettes have turned to LunchDates for a boutique style, concierge service for your love life. With the advent of dating apps and swiping becoming the norm, old fashion matchmaking is as accepted and popular as ever. There are more singles today ditching dating sites and opting for a more dignified way to meet their match. As such, educated, successful professionals in Boston want a better way to date.

Right now it's harder to meet and connect with people because we're so busy and looking for the right one takes a backseat. That's why people work with LunchDates. Not because they can't get a date, but because they're done with dates that go nowhere and want a relationship.

STOP WASTING TIME ONLINE OR WITH DATING APPS, CALL 617-DATE-NOW OR GO TO WWW.LUNCHDATES.COM TODAY!

Use promo code: IMPROPER to receive a special Valentine's Day offer!

THE UGLY TRUTH ABOUT ONLINE DATING IN BOSTON

Since the creation of online dating in 1995, the world of the single professional has been turned upside down. Today meeting other singles online is not only common place, it may appear to some to be the only way to date. However are we any better off? And are we actually getting into relationships? Check out these shocking statistics about online dating.

53% AMERICANS FABRICATE PARTS OR ALL OF THEIR DATING PROFILE DETAILS

30% WOMEN 16% MEN

COMPETITION IS STEEP! PEOPLE ARE GETTING HELP WITH THEIR PROFILES ONLINE IN ORDER TO GET AHEAD IN DATING.

5% THINK AGAIN ABOUT WHAT YOU'VE HEARD. ONLY 5% OF PEOPLE ARE IN RELATIONSHIPS BY MEETING ONLINE.

1% AMERICANS WHO HAVE BEEN IN A COMMITTED RELATIONSHIP FOR MORE THAN TEN YEARS MET THEIR SPOUSE OR PARTNER ONLINE.

So what's a busy, single professional to do if they want to find love? LunchDates arranges casual dates that help single, career-minded men and women find successful relationships. The professionals that work with LunchDates have no problem meeting people on their own, but like a more dignified approach to dating and like the privacy and confidentiality that their service provides.

SINGLES' DIGITS

IT SEEMS LIKE VALENTINE'S DAY might be the most universally hated holiday of the year. If you're single, Hallmark forgets you. If you're coupled up, there's a mandate for a card, dinner and—as SNL so accurately put it—"Some Dumb Little Thing from CVS." But while most of the population would rather celebrate Arbor Day than Valentine's Day, there is one upside to Feb. 14: It almost always coincides with The Improper's Bachelor/ette issue. This year's crew of 20 eligible singles is as spectacular as ever, including a Blue Man, the Celtics' assistant general manager and a sharp-tongued podcaster. They've even got a lot in common, from crushes on Gal Gadot to a love for Comic-Con. Perhaps some of them might consciously couple up, like two of our picks from last year who rumor has it are still dating.

If fascinating people are your thing, there's nobody more interesting than our cover subject, Victoria Arlen. The 23-year-old was in a coma for nearly four years, wakening from it only to find out she was paralyzed. After winning a gold medal in the Paralympic Games in 2012, she eventually relearned how to walk despite not having any sensation in her legs. Arlen recently competed on Dancing with the Stars, and her memoir will be released this summer. Read her inspiring interview with Jonathan Soroff and you might just have a reason to smile this Valentine's Day. If not, Arbor Day is April 27.

MANE DRAW:
G2O's new space has 17 hair styling stations as well as a private styling station

G2O SPA + SALON, 33 EXETER ST., BOSTON (617-262-2220) G2OSPASALON.COM

When the team behind G2O started to plan for the spa and salon's new facilities, there was no doubt that it was going to be bigger than its previous Newbury Street digs. Bigger is indeed expected to be better with 3,000 additional square feet, more stations for hair styling, more rooms for massages and an even taller indoor waterfall that now spans two stories as opposed to one. And when G2O opens its doors in February, owner Joyce Hampers and the rest of the staff also have some new services to offer, including an increased focus on salt therapy.

"We knew we had to take it to the next level," says Christina Gallardo, a spokeswoman for G2O Spa + Salon. "Salt therapy is extremely popular, and we wanted to be the first in the city to really capitalize on that trend."

In keeping with that salt theme, one wall in a coed sauna is lined with Himalayan salt bricks, and a private flotation pod allows customers to unwind in a super-concentrated bath—essentially an Epsom bath on steroids. There's also a Himalayan salt massage and a similar body treatment. But the signature treatment at the new G2O will be the salt cave: 380-square-feet lined with Himalayan salt bricks and eight chairs. The 45-minute service will release salt into the air from a halogenerator.

"We knew we had to take it to the next level," says Christina Gallardo, a spokeswoman for G2O Spa + Salon. "Salt therapy is extremely popular, and we wanted to be the first in the city to really capitalize on that trend."

There's more than salt to savor in the three-story, 17,000-square-foot space. G2O's top floor is carpeted to ensure a quieter experience. There are two couples massage rooms among the now seven massage rooms and six other treatment rooms. On the same floor, there's also a relaxation room with six chaise lounge chairs as well as room for virtual-reality meditation. On the lower levels, the manicure stations include the now-mandatory air vents, while the pedicure seats feature dividers for privacy. The salon—boasting picturesque views of Copley Square—is outfitted with 17 hair styling stations as well as one private station. In addition, there's four Jetsons-like Italian hair dryers that include infrared technology and come with 11 different settings to adjust temperature and speed as well as a shampoo room that fits six customers.

"Everything is the newest and cutting edge," Gallardo says. "We knew we still wanted to be a one-stop shop and an urban oasis, but we wanted to up the ante." / Matt Martinelli

BACON ME CRAZY

A BACON-CENTRIC FOOD TRUCK FINDS A BRICK-AND-MORTAR HOME IN CHARLESTOWN

THE BACON TRUCK CAFE
50 Terminal St., Boston
bostonbacontruck.com

For high school friends Sam Williams and J.J. Frosk, bacon was where it all began. Co-owners of the Bacon Truck, the duo launched the mobile eatery and occasional pop-up in 2013, hoping that bacon would always be the focus of their food endeavors. Now Williams and Frosk are bringing their venture to Charlestown as they prepare to open their first brick-and-mortar location, the Bacon Truck Cafe, on Feb. 24.

"Charlestown is kind of lacking a fast-casual experience," Williams says. "There's some great new restaurants that are definitely on the higher end of things, but we're trying to bring a concept to the area that's super-casual for people who just want to grab a breakfast sandwich and an iced coffee, but made with really quality ingredients."

Monday through Saturday, the cafe will serve breakfast and lunch alongside hot coffee and cold brew from Fazenda. The menu will feature a build-your-own breakfast sandwich, along with specialty items like the Waker Upper, made with bacon-scallion cream cheese, crispy salmon bacon, tomato, pickled red onion and avocado served on an Iggy's everything bagel. One lunch option includes a housemade burger with a bacon and brisket patty, American cheese, special sauce and house pickles on a Martin's potato roll. And available at all times will be a longstanding Bacon Truck favorite: the deep-fried bacon mac-and-cheese bites.

Located in the spot formerly occupied by the short-lived Prescott, the cafe has an industrial vibe with high ceilings and modern light fixtures. There's seating for 19 inside and a patio that accommodates up to 20 people with a view of the Bunker Hill Monument and the Tobin Bridge. The new location also includes sufficient loading space that will allow the pair to continue operating the food truck in conjunction with the cafe.

"The inside is going to look like nothing else in Boston," Frosk says. "We're bringing design elements from the truck, and we're incorporating those into the brick and mortar. It's going to be—we hope—one of the most unique spaces in the city."

Good Eats: Batter Up

The buttermilk fried Brussels sprouts at Highland Fried confirm some universal culinary proofs: Add batter. Add bacon. Watch as food is devoured. "Brussels sprouts can be a little—I don't want to say bitter, but they're pretty heavy," says Mark Romano, who owns the new Cambridge spot and Somerville's Highland Kitchen with his wife, Marci Joy. "The batter gives it a little tang and crunch." The restaurant, which opened in December and was home to the original and rebooted East Coast Grill, features a fried chicken and barbecue-focused menu alongside Tiki drinks and eclectic appetizers. This particular one, served with slabs of bacon and a bright lemon juice and horseradish compound butter, is a home run. / Nathan Tavares

Drink of the Moment
NIBGRONI

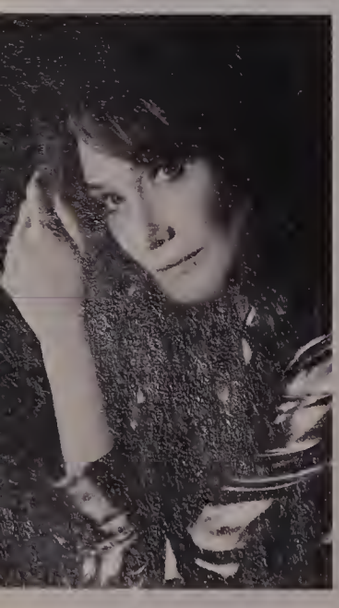
PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Cocoa nib-infused Campari, Bols Genever and sweet vermouth

TASTE: Emma Connolly—lead bartender at Fairsted Kitchen's reincarnate, Grassona's—isn't much of a chocolate fan, though she can get behind this take on the classic Italian aperitif that's infused with dried, fermented cocoa beans, lending a bitterness. "It has this really, really lovely chocolate flavor to it without being sweet," Connolly says.

PAIR IT WITH: The spiciness of the mussels fra diavolo ($11) starter, made with Calabrian chili.

CHOCOLATE CRUSH: Another Night in Brookline features crème de cacao, Four Roses, lemon and wine-based aperitif Cappelletti (think Campari, but with a touch of sweetness). The Fairsted team kept this version of its signature No Sleep Till Brookline tipple, which was on the menu at the Washington Square restaurant for its entire four and a half years, before the new concept was turned around in less than three weeks after the New Year.



DON'T BE BITTER: If sugary sips are more your thing, go for the Dancing Daisy, a Tiki-inspired reposado drink with falernum, Gran Classico and grapefruit that's topped off with ginger beer.

ELSEWHERE: The refreshed spot upped its beverage offerings, from nearly doubling the number of cocktails to more draft and canned beers as well as wines by the glass, including Brunello di Montalcino ($25). Connolly's favorite addition, however, is from Fattoria Mani di Luna. She likens its all-natural, funky, earthy sangiovese to "a hippie Chianti." Not only are the fruits destemmed by hand, says Connolly: "The grapes are actually stomped in the production." / Soroh Hagman

FRENCH CONNECTION

France's former first lady Carla Bruni is no stranger to the public eye. The supermodel graced runways in the '80s and '90s, but now her musical passion takes her to Berklee Performance Center on Feb. 15 to perform from French Touch, her new album of covers. We chatted before the World Music/CRASHarts show. / Julio Aparicio

WHAT ARE SOME OF YOUR GREATEST MUSICAL INFLUENCES? In terms of folk music, I was very much influenced by Bob Dylan and Leonard Cohen. I was also quite influenced by country music. That's why I put a Tammy Wynette and a Willie Nelson song on the album. I love country music.

DO YOU PREFER SINGING OR SONGWRITING? I like songwriting very much. I like singing too, but I never would have become a singer without songwriting. I wanted to write my own songs and I needed a singer for those songs, so that's how I became a singer. [Laughs.] This album is such a new thing for me to be able to just be a singer.

DO YOU EVER GET STAGE FRIGHT WHEN YOU PERFORM? I get so nervous performing. I get so frightened. It's so moving to go on stage. No matter how many runways I've been on as a model, that's only your body. There's nothing emotional about being on the runway. You're not the one who is creating anything. But singing is completely different. It has something to do with your soul. The voice so much relies on the soul. It doesn't rely on your appearance. It relies on something that is very hard to control—your emotions. So yes, I'm so scared when I go on stage, but I like the fear

Allison Daroie, the founder of clothing line Paridaez, carved out her own slice of paradise near the Common last month with the opening of her new store. "With the etymological background of the brand name being an ancient Persian word for garden or walled enclosure, I'm trying to make the store more of a garden-like setting," Daroie says of the 630-square-foot space, which features a lush plant-filled wall and her clothing neatly lined on racks. Each of her minimalistic pieces can transform into different articles of clothing, like the Albatross, which can be worn as a pencil skirt, a dress or a tank top. Daroie hopes that the spot will be an oasis for women looking to escape the city's busy streets, where they'll find multi-purpose items to carry them through their jam-packed days. / Nathan Tavares

FOCUS ON YOUR BRAIN. Take a meditation course or download an app—my personal favorites are Headspace and Calm. Neuroscience research suggests 10 minutes of meditation can "retrain your brain" to feel happier.

AVOID SOCIAL MEDIA. Delete apps from your phone so you aren't tempted to peruse snaps, posts and tweets in times of desperation or yearning or stupidity.

RALLY YOUR SQUAD. Often in relationships, we prioritize our partners and connect less with family and friends. The largest buffer for stressful life events is social support. Prioritize those connections.

DO NOT TEXT, CALL, EMAIL, DRIVE BY, STALK OR ATTEMPT TO CONTACT YOUR EX BY ANY MEANS. If you really want to reach out and believe it's critical to your well-being to do so, wait until Feb. 15, when the candy hearts are half-priced.

DATE YOURSELF. Buy yourself a Valentine's Day gift and create new rituals. Whether it's a daily cup of tea, yoga practice or an audiobook in the car, treat these as opportunities to connect with your new lover—you.

PAY ATTENTION TO THE WAY YOU TREAT YOUR BODY. With adequate sleep, healthy food and exercise, you can decrease depression symptoms by 30 to 40 percent.

WHEN ALL ELSE FAILS: Get a dog.

LOVELY DAY
Whether you're flying solo, mingling with friends or heading out with your partner this Valentine's Day, go to improper.com to get some ideas on the best ways to spend the holiday in Boston.

OUR LAND IS OUR LAND

A NOVEL LOOK AT A CENTURIES-OLD MYSTERY

A Roanoke Story* by Deahn Berrini
Published by Somerset Hall Press, 214 pages, $16

The Native Americans who populated Roanoke, North Carolina, in 1587 lived in a world full of rich and mystical traditions as Deahn Berrini describes in A Roanoke Story. The work of historical fiction tells the story of 115 English men, women and children who showed up on the shores of the bay one day—and just as quickly mysteriously disappeared.

Told from the tribe's perspective in a story telling mode that densely captures the Roanoke ethos and language, Berrini presents leaders and healers and many tribal characters, including the charming Keeta, who's engaged in the world of planting and experiences her body becoming a turtle, seemingly a message from her ancestors regarding strength and solidity. The book often shows members identifying with the spirit of particular animals: the bobcat for stealth; the hawk for hunting; and the fox for adaptability. One warrior member, Wanchese, wears a black crow feather that represents his spirit-traveler self as a symbolic diplomat connecting the body and the spirit.

The close-knit tribe's life is threatened by the ominous appearance of white men in canoes. The Roanokes are caught between accommodating and resisting what gradually appear to be hostile English colonizers. These people bring poison arrows, their style is coarse, they mistreat animals and disrespect trees. They consume the tribe's food without reciprocity—a move that highlights the very different sacred and beautiful ways of the Roanokes. The colonizers' intentions soon come to light in a blood-filled scene. And then, the British visitors disappear, leaving "not a button, nor shoe, nor note." Berrini, a Boston College Law grad and longtime North Shore resident, has novelized this historical story, bringing us inside a tale packed with names and roles, glossary included.

From page 99: "Keeta bent over the slippery cord, put it between her teeth and bit quickly. As she did she felt her baby's spirit leave her like a puff of wind, to go his own way." ◆

MAINE FORCE

PORTLAND BECKONS WITH CLASSIC FOOD FAVES AND SHINY NEWCOMERS

THE BIGGEST REASON TO HEAD NORTH in the winter is to ski, but what about for all those folks who want to avoid the mayhem of the slopes? Although the specific produce and fish on your plate might be seasonal, the food scene in Portland, Maine, is certainly a year-round draw.

A New England inn always fits the bill during the colder months, and the Danforth Inn is a smart choice as it's also well located for your culinary adventures. Built in 1823, the Danforth is positioned on the edge of Portland's burgeoning West End and a short walk to the bustling Old Port. A brick exterior, crown moulding and fireplaces in every room add touches of grandeur to the property, which underwent major renovations in 2010. The West End Suite, one of nine available accommodations, includes a sitting room with a private patio, a piano and a curved velvet couch.

The first floor, with a grass-covered chandelier hanging in the lobby and a giant Buddha head in front of the fireplace, provides a hint that your food-and-drink experience here will stray far from the fusty New England feel you might expect from an older inn. The Tempo Dulu restaurant, helmed by Michael MacDonnell, offers southeast Asian fare such as tamarind-glazed foie gras as well as a lobster tasting menu and a separate chef's tasting menu.

You can find the same southeast Asian influence in the hotel's Opium lounge. A small plates menu features delights such as pork-belly dumplings, curried duck arancini and moo ping pork skewers. Redesigned in May, with wallpapered ceilings, plush velvet furniture and a beefed-up beverage program, the chic lounge draws a mix of locals and guests from the inn. Under the guidance of bar manager Alexa Doyer, the cocktail menu shows off a playful side with 20 drinks, including a snow cone that features two scoops of sorbet, sake, yuzu, pineapple, ginger and a salmon caviar topping. Also a must-try is the Jakarta—made with a Chinese spice blend, rye, amaro, sweet vermouth, bitters and absinthe—which is poured tableside and delivered with a puff of smoke atop it.

Step outside the Danforth to continue a food crawl through Portland, where you'll want to mix in a few of the classic favorite spots along with some buzzy newcomers. Traverse the red-brick sidewalks of the West End and pop into Chaval, a brasserie that opened this summer. Sample items from the seasonal menu such as the fall-off-the-bone lamb ribs or the savory cassoulet, and choose a local beer from standout city breweries such as Bissell Brothers or Oxbow. A few blocks away sits Little Giant, which also opened this summer next to a market owned by the same husband-and-wife duo. The kitchen, led by Rian Wyllie (formerly of Deep Ellum and Lone Star), offers an impressive brunch menu including a savory johnnycake that's topped with a fried egg, blueberry maple syrup and a habanero-cheddar wurst that oozes cheese as you cut into it.

You could easily spend a full day wandering through the Old Port area and its adjoining streets while exploring the food favorites that have helped raise Portland's profile in the past decade. Stop at standby Holy Donut to try out the dark chocolate glaze with sea salt or the sweet potato ginger glaze, made with Maine taters. For lunch, you can opt for a one-two casual approach. Put in your name at the revered Duckfat before the mob descends. Once inside, chow down on the poutine with Belgian fries cooked in duck fat, and top it with a sunny-side-up egg and some duck confit. And don't forget to wash it all down with one of the seven milkshakes available, including a shake that uses coffee from local roaster Tandem. But don't fill up: A couple of blocks away is the original Eventide Oyster Co., located in more charming confines than its Fenway sibling. Go straight for the brown butter lobster roll and double up on the soft, delicate buns by ordering a buttermilk fried chicken sandwich topped with pickled watermelon, ranch dressing and cole slaw.

After a day of indulgence, you might need a little time to unwind, though don't take too long. Arrive at Central Provisions about 10 minutes before it opens for weekend dinner at 5 pm. If you're there at 5:05, the dining room will already be filled—and as there's an entire menu of mouthwatering options to explore, the customers likely aren't leaving anytime soon. Enjoy some veggies such as the fried cauliflower with ras el hanout, chickpeas, feta and herbs and the smoked carrots topped with cinnamon, goat cheese and pistachio. And be sure to look at the daily specials list, where you might find some fresh Maine uni crudo available.

With so much of a local focus on the food, it's heartening to see that ethos cross over to boutiques in the city. Blanche + Mimi and k Colette both sell housewares and other oh-so-cute gifts. Ramblers Way offers sustainable clothing, with some of the products crafted on the ground floor of the two-story store. Stop into the Portland Art Gallery to browse some work by local artists or head into Zane for stylish women's tops or denim. You could have good reason to make a purchase: After a weekend full of eating and drinking in Portland, you really might need some new jeans.

FAST-CASUAL FAB

ANOUSH'ELLA ELEVATES AN OFTEN-UNDERWHELMING FORMAT WITH SOUL AND SPARKLE

In this corner of The Improper, we mostly focus on swank fine-dining restaurants with table service, wandering downmarket only occasionally to the odd fabulous taquería, exceptional pizzeria or amazing Shaanxi noodle joint. Somehow we've never reviewed the suddenly ubiquitous fast-casual format that Chipotle pioneered two decades ago: a chimera of fast-food counter service, highly customizable ordering, slightly nicer ambiance and somewhat-better-quality ingredients. Partly it's because we don't do chains, but as important, it's because many of these places don't inspire much joy. That shiny new place that wants to be the Chipotle of gyros still doesn't measure up to the modest old Greek storefront a couple of blocks away. But then we finally got to Anoush'ella: Saj Kitchen, a singular purveyor of Armenian-Lebanese cuisine that debuted in the South End this fall.

It has all the now-familiar fast-casual hallmarks: a gleaming, sunnily tall-windowed space with counter service (they'll run your order to your seat), an open kitchen that tantalizingly displays everything on order, a few tables (including a big communal one), one cozy low-slung booth, a few more bar and counter seats. There's a short list of housemade soft drinks ($2.75-$3) you self-serve from a refrigerated case, plus a bartender/barista dishing out a scant few beers ($5.75), wines ($8.75/glass, $48/bottle), cocktails ($9) and caffeinated drinks ($2-$5). Customers bus their own tables; takeout business is brisk. While as colorful and handsome as these places go, there are few initial hints of anything extraordinary here.

So let's start with the mezze (cold: 1/$4.25, 3/$11.45, 5/$17.85; hot: 1/$6, 3/$16, 5/$25), as these small-plates assortments also feature prominently in the various sandwiches, salads, grain bowls and yogurt dishes served here as well. You'll know most of them: excellent renditions of hummus and baba ganoush; labne (a thick strained yogurt imported from Lebanon, creamily tangy and delectable) dusted with za'atar (a dry-spice blend of thyme, marjoram, sesame and sumac); a fierce take on muhammara (here called walnut harrisa); mouth-puckering strips of pickled turnip in Day-Glo pink; a bulgur-light version of tabbouleh; a couple of pristine, herb-heavy salads. Warm and meaty mezze include hummus topped with tenderly long-braised beef chuck; dreamy roasted chicken redolent of za'atar; spiced ground lamb you may recognize as the topping of Armenian lamajuns; slender meatball-like kofta of beef and lamb; soft, mild, dumpling-like red-lentil kofta; a gorgeous layering of labne, soft-grilled eggplant and spiced ground lamb; a pilaf of rice and brown lentils crowned with more labne and a sprinkle of gobsmacking, darkly fried onions; braised beef striped with vivid-green zouk (a cilantro-based condiment) and tawny/sweet mango sauce. Enjoyed with the included pile of m'anoush, also known as saj bread—a thin, pita-like flatbread prepared on a domed grill—an assortment of these plates makes for nonpareil grazing.

If you're less hungry or want quick takeout, you can choose from a variety of m'anoush wrap sandwiches, each encasing a kaleidoscope of sensations in a compact rollup. I'd gratefully wolf down another egg roll m'anoush ($6) anytime, especially at breakfast. The flatbread tightly wraps a two-egg omelet filled with mild cheese, crunchy salad veggies, fresh mint, zingy black olives and pickled turnips and za'atar, with available upgrades of "spicy" (a complimentary slash of chili-hot harissa), labne ($0.75) and sujuk ($1.50), slices of a terrific, soppressata-like sausage. Chicken za'atar m'anoush ($9.55) similarly yields a fascinating, different-every-bite spectrum of flavors, here combining delicate shreds of za'atar chicken with hummus, tomatoes, baked-potato slices, pickled turnip and a wicked garlic sauce (plus an optional harissa hit). These sandwiches don't look huge, but they deliver intense, gigantic flavors and are deeply satisfying.

Salad bowls and grain bowls ($9.50) are hefty yet light-footed, like the monk salad of greens, roasted eggplant, red pepper, tomatoes, onion and cilantro, lightly drizzled with fresh lemon and good olive oil, or hearty, large-bore toasted couscous dolloped with hummus and walnut harissa and topped with fattoush (shards of toasted m'anoush); you can add beef, chicken, kofta or lentil kofta for protein ($3.50). Most cold mezze are available as sides ($3.50), too.

I like strained yogurt, but Anoush'ella offers garnished bowls of its sublime labne ($5.45) that are downright lovable, with savory adornments like za'atar and crunchy/tangy pomegranate seeds, or tomatoes, cukes, mint and black olives (both drizzled with fine EVOO), and sweet toppings like banana, almond, pignoli, cinnamon and honey, or blueberries, walnuts, and a "power" mix of chia, pumpkin and sunflower seeds dosed with grape molasses. Sweet m'anoush rollups ($6) work equally well as day-starters for the French-toast-and-syrup set and as lovely shareable desserts, with fillings like Nutella, strawberries, banana, cinnamon, honey and granola, or "Anoush'ella s'mores": Nutella, graham crackers and marshmallows.

Fast-casual still mostly leaves me cold. While I appreciate the format's convenience and have-it-your-way menus, it too often has a kind of corporate, assembly-line soullessness, plus ingredient quality that doesn't always justify the fast-food-plus prices. Anoush'ella soars above its peers on two obvious strengths: its novel combination of Armenian and Lebanese culinary traditions, with their complex spice palettes and ancient, elemental whole foods, and in-house preparation of superior ingredients to produce its versatile array of building blocks. The result is unfailingly delicious, often beautiful food at very fair prices. It's a worthy paragon of what the category is capable of, but too rarely delivers. ◆

➜ On Jan. 25, the Jett Foundation held its second annual Shine a Light on Duchenne Gala at the State Room, where guests enjoyed a dinner, auction and awards ceremony. Named for the son of founders Christine and Stephen McSherry, the charity raises funds to fight Duchenne muscular dystrophy, the most common fatal genetic disorder diagnosed in children. The evening's 260 guests brought in more than $200,000 for the Jett Giving Fund to help families with medical equipment.

➜ The Pan-Mass Challenge kicked off its 2018 fundraising efforts on Jan. 27 with the PMC Winter Cycle, Fenway Park's first indoor cycling event that attracted 750 cyclists on stationary bikes in the State Street Pavilion. Three hundred guests and corporate sponsors then celebrated at the Lansdowne Pub with food, drinks and musical performances by Legends of Summer and Caroline Gray. The stationary bike marathon raised more than $250,000.

Q: WHAT IS THIS NEW NON-SURGICAL FACE LIFT I HAVE BEEN HEARING ABOUT? I REALLY DON'T WANT TO HAVE SURGERY.

A: InstaLift, is a new "non-surgical" facelift. Instalift is actually a suture-lift, whereby dissolvable sutures are threaded under the skin by a qualified surgeon, and the deeper layers of your mid-face area are immediately lifted. In addition, collagen growth is stimulated which gradually adds volume. The sutures dissolve, leaving you with enhanced lift and volume in your face. You look younger, refreshed, and you look totally natural!

This is a good procedure for people with mild to moderate laxity.

It is very affordable and the results last about three years. An InstaLift takes about an hour and no sedation is needed.

BAD SEEDS

MICHAEL HANEKE'S LATEST FILM SUMS UP A NIHILISTIC CAREER

Austrian filmmaker Michael Haneke follows up his Oscar-winning Foreign Language Film, Amour, with Happy End, a cold, nihilistic provocation that functions as a semi-sequel to the unbearably heartbreaking love story from 2012. Jean-Louis Trintignant, 87, a veteran of the French new wave, once again appears as an octogenarian named Georges, and he's trying to convince someone—anyone—to end his life as dementia has begun to strip away his dignity. It's cruel, but Haneke's never been an artist who's known for his warmth, despite the tenderness he displayed in his previous film.

Returning yet again to France, the 75-year-old Haneke's latest piece of playful misanthropy doesn't simply function as a quasi-continuation of Amour, but also as a summation of his three-decade film career, a sort of greatest hits compilation that borrows elements from his entire oeuvre. The elliptical, fragmentary storytelling style recalls 2000's Code Unknown, while the backdrop of the European refugee crisis echoes the colonialism at the core of 2005's Caché. Meanwhile, the video voyeurism of 1992's crime drama Benny's Video has been updated for the smartphone and social media age, with one character recording her sociopathic acts, and another facilitating his illicit affair on Facebook Messenger. Through Haneke's observant lens, these aren't seen as moves for the better.

Other commonalities carried into Happy End are the suicidal urges presented in his first feature, 1989's The Seventh Continent, along with his focus on society's moral rot, beginning with the youngest characters, a la the proto-Nazis in 2009's The White Ribbon. As such, you'd be correct if you guessed that Haneke's latest film's title is bitterly ironic.

The closest person that Happy End's fragmented narrative has to a protagonist is a 13-year-old girl, Ève Laurent (Fantine Harduin). Possessing a chilly disposition to go with her cellphone, this adolescent is revealed to be the amateur documentarian behind the video footage that opens the film. As Ève narrates, we witness her poisoning her pet hamster with her mother's antidepressants, which we gradually discover is a trial run for secretly poisoning her mother. Yes, Ève is a bad seed—but in true Haneke fashion, we'll also find that the roots of her sociopathy run deep in the Laurent clan.

As such, you'd be correct if you guessed that his latest film's title is bitterly ironic.

Ève is sent to the Laurent family estate in the coastal city of Calais to live with her father, Thomas (Amélie's Mathieu Kassovitz)—Georges' son—a doctor with a new wife (Laura Verlinden) and an infant. Ève is welcomed by the upper-class family, which allows Haneke to indulge in another variation of a tale he never tires of telling: that of the bourgeoisie too blinded by their privilege to notice the suffering that surrounds them.

Haneke introduces Ève to the multigenerational Laurent household after we observe another bit of video footage—this time captured from a static security camera—as a wall collapses at one of the family's construction sites. That project is overseen by Thomas' older sister Anne (Haneke's frequent muse, Isabelle Huppert, who not-so-coincidentally portrayed a character also named Anne Laurent in the director's apocalyptic drama Time of the Wolf), who hopes to cede the business to her emotionally ill-equipped adult son, the wayward man-child Pierre (Franz Rogowski).

A worker is injured during the accident, but even this tragedy isn't enough to disrupt the family's banal routine, which is centered around the dinner table. It's here that Ève is introduced to her grandfather. Despite the fact that Georges has trouble remembering who this young girl is, the two develop an odd bond based on their shared antipathy toward the adults surrounding them, along with their mutual conclusion that life might not be worth living.

Although the film is presented with a linear structure, scenes don't necessarily connect, nor are we aware of how much time passes between them. And when we first see a real-time conversation transpire on Facebook, Haneke's camera is fixed on a computer screen, leaving us to figure out who is chatting. In other words, this isn't a passive viewing experience. It's up to us to figure out who or what we should be focusing on within the frame, which has been exquisitely composed by Haneke's frequent collaborator, cinematographer Christian Berger.

Pay special attention to the working class, like the Moroccan couple (Hassam Ghancy and Nabiha Akkari) employed as servants by the Laurents. More specifically, observe the African refugees who are visible only when we take the time to look for them. Thus, the audience becomes complicit in the characters' apathy toward others—although you may be laughing too hard during the final moments of the film to notice. But as is usual with Haneke, the joke's on us. ◆

FRESHMAN LIT

A CHANCE CONNECTION GIVES VOICE TO A POP-PUNK UPSTART

Alex Luciano embraces her status as a late bloomer when it comes to performing—and she's still only 22. Nonetheless, the past few years have been a whirlwind for the singer/guitarist, crisscrossing the country with drummer Noah Bowman, her counterpart in the buzzed-about New York pop-punk duo Diet Cig.

"We still feel so fresh and new to all of it," Luciano says as the band's tour van pulls into Toronto, though it's been even more of a novel experience for her. "I was in musicals growing up, but singing was never really a thing I took seriously," the Albany-area native says. Although she learned "a couple of chords on the acoustic guitar," Luciano also didn't really take up the instrument until college when she wrote a few songs of her own, inspired by DIY bands in New Paltz, where she attended the State University of New York.

Bowman, 25, played in one of those bands, and after she approached him onstage to borrow a lighter, they forged a connection that sealed their fate. At first she was going to film a video for his band in a tour-documentary style, says Luciano, who majored in digital media production. But soon they began fleshing out her songs.

"It's especially cool to see someone you didn't think you could relate to singing along to songs that are so personal to me."

"I wanted to be on the other side of the camera, and I had a drive to be the performer rather than the person recording the performance," she says. "That kind of sparked that feeling of, 'I think I can do this. And I want to do this.'"

Luciano found a fitting foil in Bowman. "I'm like the daydreamer, and Noah's the guy who gets shit done—it's very complementary," she says. In 2015, they recorded the EP Over Easy, and went from playing sweaty basement parties to heavy touring, leaving graduation for another time and media production likely altogether. "I don't see myself returning to school for the same thing," Luciano says. "Right now, Diet Cig has kinda taken over our lives, in a really cool way."

As she sings in "Road Trip," from the band's April 2017 debut album Swear I'm Good at This, "I lost the map. No going back." Fans clearly responded to Luciano's candid, wit-wrapped songs about coming of age and dealing with teen ambitions and frustrations, from feeling lonely and impatient to deflecting dead-end dudes.

"It was pretty awkward when I sang 'Sixteen' to my mom in the audience for the first time," Luciano says of the album's lead track, where she shifts from wistful reflection to fuzzed-out resolve as she sings about "moaning my own name" in the back of a truck with a sleep-and-tell boy also named Alex. She tackles irksome gender dynamics in other songs like "Link in Bio," which addresses the pressure on young women not to be too loud or proud. "I'm done with being a chill girl," Luciano sings. "I'm trying to take over the world."

"There are certain emotions that I've grown up feeling are OK, and if I show myself being angry or horny or any emotion, that would make people uncomfortable. I was making myself smaller to fit into this box of what other people thought was palatable," she says. "These are a lot of my honest parts that maybe I wouldn't tell you if we're friends, but I've kinda gotten to unpack them on the record."

Those songs are then translated on stages like the Brighton Music Hall, where Diet Cig plays March 2 (as a four piece with added bass and synth players to fill out the sound). And while much of the band's audience is high school and college-age, the singer adds that the demographic at shows stretches to middle-age fans.

"It's cool to see someone like yourself rocking out to the songs, but it's especially cool to see someone you didn't think you could relate to singing along to songs that are so personal to me," Luciano says. "Maybe these feelings of trying your best and feeling not good enough and figuring it all out don't always go away when you just grow up. Those feelings are relatable, regardless of your age." ◆

ME VS. TIME

LEARNING LIFE'S LESSONS FROM TOM BRADY'S DOCUMENTARY

Well, so much for the Super Bowl. I know you can't win them all, but I'm still pretty salty about how that played out. So let's not talk about it. Instead, let's talk about my new favorite show, Tom vs. Time.

If you haven't seen it, Tom vs. Time is a Tom Brady documentary on Facebook Watch, which is Facebook's version of TV. I guess Brady couldn't get a deal on a more legitimate platform, like Crackle, but maybe that'll come with season two.

I'm all in on this show, mostly because Brady and I have so much in common. We're both hunky 40-year-olds who can't run very fast and have hot wives. Yeah, the particulars are a little bit different—he's 66 days older than I am—but I feel like TB12 and I face a lot of the same questions. How do you stay in shape as you get older? What should you be eating? How many nannies and staff should you bring to Costa Rica to watch the kids while you go surfing with a Brazilian supermodel? Thankfully, we have Tom vs. Time to provide some answers.

Don't be alarmed when you start the show and are confronted by its bizarrely sinister opening graphics and music. When I fired up the first episode, I wondered if I'd made a mistake and started a documentary about a serial killer: "The Dimpled Dismemberer lured victims with his charming smile and ability to throw tight 40-yard spirals right out of the no-huddle offense." The dour opener almost makes Brady look like a villain. Which, outside of New England, I suppose he is.

I was hoping the show would reveal the practical methods behind Brady's utter immunity to aging, but Tom vs. Time never gets too granular on the training side of things. From what I gather from the show, the secret to long-term physical health is to run sprints while a guy with a man-leash tries to hold you back. Oh, and drink nothing but blueberry smoothies. And get weird massages from your trainer. That would be Alex Guerrero, Brady's body coach. Guerrero's methods are, shall we say, unorthodox, in that his massages look like fights. He goes to town on Brady's quad like a guy trying to sand his phone number off the wall of a truck-stop restroom, while Brady flails his legs in the manner of a drowning man being attacked by a squid. I'm not sure how I'd even request such a massage, but the first step would probably involve going to one of those places that's open unusually late.

The show is less about Brady's physical prowess than about his work ethic and motivation, his constant striving for self-improvement. Gisele is an interesting partner in this, because she simultaneously encourages and reassures him while also exuding a strong "Could you retire already?" vibe. To that end, the Costa Rican surf scene is followed by Brady sweeping snow off his truck and visibly shivering as he begins his drive to Gillette. (It is disconcerting to see him sit in traffic, like some kind of normal.) Yet the only way Brady will retire early is if he hurts himself driving RZRs or riding Alpine slides or hurling big rocks off a mountainside, all of which we see him doing in Tom vs. Time. We can be reasonably sure that Brady won't be the guy who breaks his hand in a fight outside the Squire, but he might be the guy who tears an ACL in a freak pogo stick accident. I'm just glad Jordan's Furniture closed its trapeze school.

Brady says he tries to tune out the haters, but Tom vs. Time is liberally seasoned with audio clips of various pundits casting doubt on his abilities. So we can infer that he derives motivation from the doubt. In fact, I might hire some angry strangers to tell me that I suck. Oh wait, that happens already. One reader said that my writing made him want to, "Get up on my roof, tie a fishing line around my testicles, tie the other end to a branch, and jump off the roof." Oh yeah? Listen, buddy. The joke's on you, because I live by the code of TB12, and saying stuff like that is only going to make me write twice as hard.

From what I gather from the show, the secret to long-term physical health is to run sprints while a guy with a man-leash tries to hold you back.

If there's an optimistic message here, it's that we can get smarter as we get older. "I wish I was doing at 22 years old what I've been doing for the past 10 years," Brady says. "I didn't know any better." Me either. When I was 22, I screwed up my shoulder because I thought it was a good idea to repeatedly throw a football over my house, airing out passes to people standing in the street out front. OK, fine—that wasn't when I was 22. That was this year. And yeah, I'm bragging. Look, not everybody gets smarter as they get older. But I bet it's nothing a few blueberry smoothies can't fix. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON DINNER TALK, FAST FASHION AND SMARTPHONE ADDICTION

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

I recently went to a sit-down dinner party for 10 people at a friend's house. My boyfriend and I knew the host and hostess but not any of the other guests. During the meal, we only talked to the person on our left or our right, so we never got a good sense of who everyone was. If I host a party full of people who don't know one another, what can I do to make it special and inclusive? My simple approach will enliven any dinner party and have everyone participating. Right after the main course plates are removed, tap a spoon against your wine glass to get everyone's attention. Then say, "We'll never get a chance to really know one another tonight, which is too bad. So how about we go around the table and each of us answers, 'What was your first real job out of college?' or everyone talks about the most embarrassing thing that's ever happened to them."

You can learn more about your dinner companions through these true confessions than any cocktail or table neighbor conversations. The stories are universally interesting, sad, funny and inspiring. These revealing character studies will leave everyone with a sense that, "I'd really like to see that person again." Or in some cases, "I never want to lay eyes on him. Ever." But at least the vapid sharing of, "How many kids do you have?" or, "How unbelievable is Trump?" will not be an issue. You learn about people from the stories of their past. And these stories will give you all memorable evenings. Give it a whirl, or create provocative discussions of your own.

I am a young woman who is interested in fashion and style. I buy a lot of clothes from fast fashion stores because their prices can't be beat. I recently had dinner with a group of friends who informed me that I was supporting unfair labor and pay for women and men in third-world countries. I had no idea. I suppose if I pay $6 for a shirt, then the person at the beginning of the supply chain is probably not getting a decent wage. Is it OK to shop at these stores or am I exploiting poor workers in foreign countries? We live in a country with a population of more than 320 million, and there's more than 7 billion people on the planet. In America, there is nothing we do that doesn't offend someone. We live in a global village, if your friends haven't noticed. And that genie is never going to be put back in the bottle. I was a busboy in a restaurant years ago and after watching what went on in the kitchen there, I swore I'd never eat out. If people knew the real story about how and where things are produced, they'd just curl up in a fetal position. You cannot dictate human nature or behavior. Personally, I wish that everything that I wear and eat were made in Ipswich. But it's probably unrealistic of me. Vote with your heart and conscience, but buy the fashions you prefer—and wear them proudly.

These days, everyone is glued to their phones. Leaving the house without one is like forgetting part of your soul. People know how to text, but they increasingly don't know how to talk face-to-face. The art of conversation seems to have gotten lost somewhere in the early part of the century. Do you think humans will ever learn how to talk to one another again? Will glancing at our phones when people approach us become the new norm? Well, everything changes in life, whether we want it to or not. Revolutions come and go as civilization creates disruptive discoveries: electricity, telephones, cars, planes, radio and television. Now it's the internet, which has changed almost every life. I didn't have a cellphone a decade ago. Now, I admit, I'm addicted to my smart device. An iPhone 8 sleeps next to me on a pillow, my new wife. But you must know, that in spite of all the innovation around us, human nature never changes. And the number one rule to live by is still, "All of life is relationships." Friendship, love and face-to-face communication are what ultimately get us through the night. ◆

TRUE GRIT

THE PARALYMPIC CHAMP ON WAKING FROM A COMA, WALKING AGAIN AND DANCING THE TANGO

ESPN ON-AIR PERSONALITY VICTORIA ARLEN, 23, WAS born in Boston and raised in southern New Hampshire. At the age of 11, she developed a combination of rare viral diseases that left her in a vegetative state for four years. Her doctors predicted she wouldn't survive. Upon emerging from the coma, she remained paralyzed and in a wheelchair for several years, during which time she trained as a professional swimmer and won a gold medal in the 2012 Paralympics in London. In 2015, she retook her first step and regained her ability to walk by the next year, eventually making it to the semifinals on Dancing with the Stars, despite having no sensation in her legs. She joined ESPN in 2015, hosting SportsCenter segments, appearing on College GameDay, and covering the X Games, the Special Olympics and the NCAA Frozen Four. Her autobiography, Locked In, will be published this summer.

JONATHAN SOROFF: You're kind of a walking miracle. How does that feel?
VICTORIA ARLEN: It's interesting when you use that term. It's just odd. I don't wake up and say, "Wow! I'm a walking miracle!" Sometimes, reality hits me and I'm like, "Wow, that really happened, and this is where I am," so I think, if anything, it's still shocking that I can just get up and walk, period. Being called an inspiration or a miracle is still something that's odd for me, 'cause they're very large, heavy titles with a lot of pressure to live up to.

Well, what do the experts say about you? Are you one in a million, one in a billion? It's really funny when you hear a top doctor or expert use the word "miracle," or say, "We don't know how to describe this. You shouldn't be alive, or standing here." Recovering and recovery, when you were as sick as I was and misdiagnosed for as long as I was, it was really out of the question. The question was whether I'd survive, and if I did, if I would be a vegetable and not a contributing member of society. And I heard all of that. They didn't realize that I could hear the doctors—despite my family's hopes—saying behind their backs, "Can you believe this family thinks this kid's gonna make it? This kid's a goner." And they were saying it in front of me, not realizing that I was hearing it, while putting on a kind of façade for my parents. I was told this has never happened before, that no one has come back from what I did. But I really wanted a second chance at life, and I really prayed for one, and now I have it. It's so surreal. At times, it feels like it happened a decade ago, and then other times, it's like it happened just yesterday, or I find myself saying, "Did that actually happen?"

It must be completely surreal. Well, it is, because there's no one else I can talk to about it. I don't know anyone [to who] I can say, "So, tell me about the time you were in a vegetative state and were paralyzed for a decade. How did that feel?" It's crazy. I have a very different perspective, and I'm grateful for that.

Do you think it makes you take things like bad traffic or a computer problem less seriously? I'm human, and I have my moments. If anything, it's the littler things that get to me. I feel like I know how to cheat death. I know how to do all these difficult things, but when it comes to the simplest of things, I'll be overwhelmed. If my computer crashed, I think I'd cry more, because my book is on it. That said, past week, and that was such a learning curve, too, like walking in heels. But I think it would be weird to feel my feet now, because I'm used to it. I mean, sometimes my ankle will roll and I don't realize it, so I have to be a little more careful. But it also gives me an excuse to buy nicer shoes.

"Hope is a powerful, powerful word that we don't use enough and tend to be afraid of."

How hard was it for you to learn to walk in heels, because you don't have that sensation? Pretty hard. But my friends think I have the upper hand because I can't feel how uncomfortable the shoes are. I was skiing this it, and finding the beauty for the pain, it helped. Dancing on Dancing with the Stars was kind of a way to find a purpose for the pain. Me stepping into pink frizzy pants and dancing, after watching that show from a hospital bed, was incredible. And having people tell me that that made them want to fight for themselves or their child was really powerful. There was one girl who decided not to take her life and said, "You helped me find me again. You helped me have hope." Hope is a powerful, powerful word that we don't use enough and tend to be afraid of.

Favorite ballroom dance? I really loved the Argentinean tango. I loved the staccato about it. But I also really loved the contemporary. The tango was cool, because Taylor Swift watched it, and we danced to her song. And with the contemporary, we told such a cool story.

Do you ever have nightmares that you end up back where you were? Oh, absolutely. I'm in the final edits of my book, which is coming out this summer. I have really battled post-traumatic stress in doing it, because I really never talked or cried about what happened to me, until I started writing. I just put on my warrior hat and went for it. So this book really brought that out. Initially, I had nightmares, but when I started talking about it, and dealing with

When you emerged from your coma, what was the thing that you found was most changed about the world? Well, I went from 11 to 15 overnight, pretty much. I had to learn that boys no longer had cooties, and everybody was texting, and suddenly Justin Bieber is in the picture. Those things were strange, but also, I had changed. I had grown up but didn't even realize it, so it was a question of finding normalcy, but how do you find normalcy when you've spent 4 years in a vegetative state? I always compared it to a building crashing down around me, and I had to sit up and sift through the rubble and dust off the debris. I just honestly went into survival mode and catch-up mode. My mom is constantly reminding me that I'm only 23, because I tend to go, go, go. It's been a survival technique for me, catching up and making up for lost time.

Is there anything you feel like you missed out on? I missed middle school, but apparently, I've been told by many sources that I didn't miss much. There's a quote from Joel Osteen: "God will pay you double for your trouble." I think he's honestly paid me triple or quadruple, and I'm just getting started. In my family, we laugh that during those four years, I was just consolidating my plans for conquering the world. ◆

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: The Greek islands are pretty awesome and incredibly romantic, especially the lesser-known gems, like Mylos.

MORGAN NICOLE SESSOMS, 33

Model, actress and fashion stylist

CAREER PATH: Before entering the acting and modeling world, I majored in behavioral neuroscience and pre-medical studies at Barnard College and was a member of the Columbia women's varsity swim team. After graduation, I entered the biotech field before receiving an MBA from Boston University. I hope to soon pursue a law degree.

TO STAY FIT: I try to diversify between hot yoga, cycling and dance classes.

BEST FEATURE: Physically, my eyes, but creativity, thoughtfulness and a sense of humor.

DEAL BREAKER: Dishonesty, meanness and poor hygiene.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Listen and learn. It helps me get a sense of a man's vibe.

WORST TRAIT: Sometimes I can be overly analytical.

MOST DEPLORABLE CHARACTERISTIC IN OTHERS: Jealousy, lack of empathy, or anything requiring malice of forethought.

MOST ROMANTIC THING OR PLACE IN THE WORLD: Knowing that you are truly with someone you can trust and rely on—in a place like the Blue Lagoon or a villa in the Maldives.

DO PEOPLE UNFAIRLY JUDGE WOMEN'S INTELLIGENCE BASED ON THEIR LOOKS: Unfortunately, I think that's a distinct possibility.

IF YOU WERE A WINE VARIETAL, YOU WOULD BE: A merlot, because of its softness and adaptability

HEATHER FOLEY, 37

Wardrobe/prop stylist and podcast host

CAREER PATH: By day, I'm a wardrobe and prop stylist with Anchor Artists, but I moonlight as host of Caught Up: A Podcast from South Boston, and I'm a contributor to Caught in Southie and Caught in Dot.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I'm an expert-level present wrapper, and the world's worst hard-boiled egg peeler.

BEST FEATURE: Does being fun count? If not, I think I have a pretty nice chin and jawline.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Jason Momoa, most of the Pats' offense and Steve Carell.

DEAL BREAKER: No sense of humor or a personality like stale saltines.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Go someplace where the tables aren't too close together, because subjecting poor innocent people to your first date is just rude.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: If I got stood up, I would have to move, witness-protection style. I would also drop dead if a guy had on water shoes.

MOST DEPLORABLE CHARACTERISTIC IN OTHERS: Lack of empathy.

MOST ROMANTIC THING IN THE WORLD: The most romantic thing a guy can do is put my air conditioners in and then take them out. My love language is manual labor.

REAL HOUSEWIVES*? YEAH OR NAY? A big YEAH, and don't be a turd and try to make me feel bad about it, OK?

ICE CREAM OR CHAMPAGNE: ICE CREAM WITH A CHAMPAGNE FLOAT. DUH.

Marketing manager at Mass. Office of Travel & Tourism

FAMILY VALUES: I'm Haitian-American, and family is huge to me. My parents, uncles and aunts sacrificed a lot so that my siblings, cousins and I could have the world, and there's nothing better than a giant family cookout.

OCCUPATIONAL HAZARD: Now that I work in tourism, I've caught a little travel bug. My last two trips have been planned around tattoo artists who I like in Montreal and Berlin. It's nuts, but their talent is worth it.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I went to the Academy of the Pacific Rim Charter School, where they taught us Mandarin Chinese from seventh through 12th grade. I took it for my language requirement in college, too, but you need to study and practice every day, and I'm a few years removed now. I took another course at the Boston Language Institute last year, and I want to become fluent. I can also drive backward really well.

BEST FEATURE: I've been told I have nice teeth. Seven years of braces will do that.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): To make her laugh, after Comic Con, I walked to the North End in my Spider-Man suit to visit this girl who was working in a small boutique. She laughed, and plenty of other people did, too.

DEAL BREAKER: Cats. I'm not even allergic. They just creep me out.

WORST TRAIT: I'm not comfortable with being the center of attention. People call it "shy," but I prefer "reserved" or "laid-back," even though "shy" is probably closer to the truth.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: I ran the internship program [in the governor's office] and many of the interns I recruited went on to get full-time jobs in the administration.

BRITTANY MCDONOUGH, 28

Director at MassChallenge

BOSTON BONA FIDES: Born, raised and still live in East Boston. I love it here.

INTERNATIONAL CRED: This year, through work, I've had the opportunity to meet entrepreneurs from Mexico, Australia, Dubai and regions in between.

CHARITABLE INVOLVEMENT: Boston's a small city with international reach. I'm on the board of directors for the Boston Irish Business Association and the ChileMass Alliance.

HOBBIES: Traveling. I just got back from an incredible trip to Tanzania, Ethiopia and the Seychelles. I want to hit the six inhabited continents this year, and I'm already on pace to see four by April.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I played steel pan for years and taught music for the Boston Public Schools. More often than not, when I have headphones on at work, I'm listening to a mix of dancehall and soca.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Morris Chestnut and Channing Tatum

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: A strong jawline.

DEAL BREAKER: Smoking and my dogs not liking him.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: Being rude to the waitstaff, and being on his phone the whole time.

WORST TRAIT: Ghosting.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE OR THING IN THE WORLD: Anywhere can be romantic, if you're present in the moment. The most romantic thing is being on the same level.

DAVID GUERRA, 37
Founder and director of A R E A Gallery

PROVENANCE: I'm a gallerist, independent curator and a lawyer. Born and raised in Havana, I studied law at Oxford and Harvard. I also hold a degree in international relations and worked as a diplomat.

HOBBIES: My mom gave me a Russian camera when I was 8 years old, and I haven't stopped taking pictures since. I photograph structures, bodies and the life on the streets of the cities I've visited.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Sufjan Stevens

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): I traveled 1,034 miles to meet someone I had met online. We fell in love after that.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: A discriminatory statement.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: Reinventing myself to turn my passion into a career.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: I'm an islander, so bring me to any island and I'm happy. The Canary Islands, where my family is from, is a great place for romance.

DO YOU ASSESS A ROMANTIC PROSPECT THE SAME WAY YOU ASSESS A PIECE OF ART: I do. I always tell collectors they should collect the art they love. Usually you love the artwork you connect with. It is very instinctual. Our social and romantic interactions are also based on the quality of those connections. Once you've started collecting art, you only buy those pieces you can't stop thinking about after the first encounter at a gallery or a studio. When it comes to dating, it's instinctual, and I seek those same connections. I love what I admire.

VI NGUYEN, 39
MRI technologist

HOBBIES: Oh boy, where do I even begin? Food is a hobby, right? I'm a foodie. I love eating and cooking all sorts of delicious culinary goodness. And photography is one of my favorite hobbies. My latest passion is for lighthouses and sunsets.

SPORTS: The only sport that I've been playing lately is golf, and I'm an amateur—although I did get an award for longest drive in our family tournament one year. I get myself into a bunch of activities, from running and hiking to rappelling down waterfalls. I'm a tomboy at heart.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I have amazing vocals in the shower.

BEST FEATURE: My freckles.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): Hiding my long-term relationship from my parents all through college, since I was only supposed to concentrate on my studies. Sorry, mom and dad!

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Have a nice cocktail or glass of wine and get to know my date to see if that chemistry is there.

COCKTAIL OF CHOICE: Moscow mule.

MOST DEPLORABLE CHARACTERISTIC IN OTHERS: Arrogance.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: I was able to leg press 415 pounds and deadlift 170 pounds recently.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: The Maldives

MALIA MAIER, 26

Marketing coordinator at Boston Public Market

CAREER PATH: While managing the East Boston farmers market, I fell in love with the farmers market scene, and lucky for me the Boston Public Market opening coincided with the end of my AmeriCorps service.

AWARDS: I hold the basketball records for steals and assists at Wellesley College and barely made the 1,000-point club, thanks to two free-throws in my final game.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I've danced hula since I was 3 years old, and I started competing at the age of 7. Most of my weekends growing up were spent racing from basketball or volleyball games to hula shows, changing outfits in the car. Hula dancing is definitely the thing I miss most since moving to the East Coast. In terms of languages, I'm fluent in Spanish.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: A genuine smile and nice arms. A Spanish accent is a plus.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Beat him in a game of one-on-one.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: Hawaii, hands down. But it's mostly a romance between the delicious food and me.

LAST TIME YOU ATE FAST FOOD: I had a corn dog when I went to Disneyland over Christmas. Not gonna lie—it was delicious.

IF YOU WERE SOMETHING FROM A FARMERS MARKET, YOU WOULD BE: Romanesco, because it's one of the most intriguing farmers market finds. It's often described as a mix between broccoli and cauliflower, similar to my mixed heritage. Romanesco can take on big, bold flavors, but is also complex enough to stand alone, if you catch my drift.

ADAM T. MORROW, 28

Development researcher at Harvard Business School

PROVENANCE: Adopted from the Philippines when I was 7 months old, I was raised in a town of 3,000 people in East Tennessee. I stayed close to home for college and then moved to Philly for grad school at Penn.

THE EARLY BIRD CATCHES THE WORM: Fun fact: My morning starts at 4:30 am. I'm in the gym from 5:30 to 6:30, then back home, where I cook breakfast and get ready for work, and I'm out the door by 7:30.

IN YOUR SPARE TIME: I'm very passionate about wine and golf. You can usually find me at the Urban Grape in the South End at least once a week. I hit a single-digit golf handicap for the first time this fall, which is crazy considering how little I get to play here in Boston.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: The 5:30-and-flirty look, especially when there's a glass of wine or a cocktail in her hand. I'm also impressed by how someone is dressed. To me, it signals attention to detail, confidence, creativity and class.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Weekend coffee is always a good first date, but if we want to be adventurous, I'd totally be down for nine holes of golf or a game at Fenway Park.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: Studying abroad in Buenos Aires. I'd spent all 20 years of my life up to that point in East Tennessee Going to Argentina was my first time on an airplane; I only had a month of Spanish class and I had never been to a city bigger than Atlanta.

DUSTIN FONTAINE, 29

Member of Blue Man Group

CAREER PATH: I've been acting professionally for eight years, four of them as a Blue Man, where I've performed in at least eight cities spanning two continents. Outside of that, I've performed everywhere from the Actor's Studio in New York to web episodes online, and even garages in Brooklyn.

HOBBIES: If I'm not on my motorcycle, it's because the weather is impossible. I love taking long rides through the beautiful back roads and shorelines of New England. When the weather is the worst, you can find me on a mountain snowboarding, and I'll play any pickup game, from football to Frisbee. I'm also a total nerd. I love playing board games and I geek out on books about particle physics and quantum field theory.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Zoe Saldana, hands down.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: Strong, confident posture and countenance.

DEAL BREAKER: Bad tipper.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Literally anything that isn't dinner and a movie. Let's see a show or walk in a park or hike a mountain or go skydiving. We can eat, but we'd better be fueling up to do something fun.

WORST TRAIT: I cuss like a sailor, but I just read that swearing is an indication of genius. OK, so maybe I can also do some work in the humility department.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: A secluded park bench.

DO YOU WANT YOUR ROMANTIC PROSPECT TO WEAR MORE OR LESS MAKEUP THAN YOU: You can wear whatever you damn well please. This is 2018.

ERIKA ROTH, 27

Research and development scientist

PROFESSIONAL BONA FIDES: I do research and development for a sequencing lab in Kendall Square. My job is to figure out how to make our lab processes better, faster and cheaper, so we can sequence more samples, providing researchers with large data sets. I'm in the process of getting my master's degree in biotechnology.

TO STAY FIT: I love running. I ran cross-country in high school and college. I ran the Newburyport half-marathon last fall for my dad's 60th birthday. I used to teach yoga and I'm trying to find more time for it now. I've also gotten really into spinning recently. It's a great workout when the weather isn't ideal for running outside.

HOBBIES: I'm in the process of getting scuba certified and also trying to learn Spanish in my free time.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I'm a pretty decent cook. My specialty is a gluten-free, cauliflower crust pizza.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: I used to have a huge crush on Tom Welling during his Smallville days. No one else comes to mind, so I guess I never really moved on.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: There's something about broad shoulders and a muscular back.

FIRST DATE M.O.: I know a first date is going well if I'm comfortable enough to show my weird, quirky side. I might as well let my date know what he's getting himself into.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: Oddly enough, being at the beach where I grew up is the most intimate and special place for me. There's no place in the world like it, and being able to share that experience with someone else is really special.

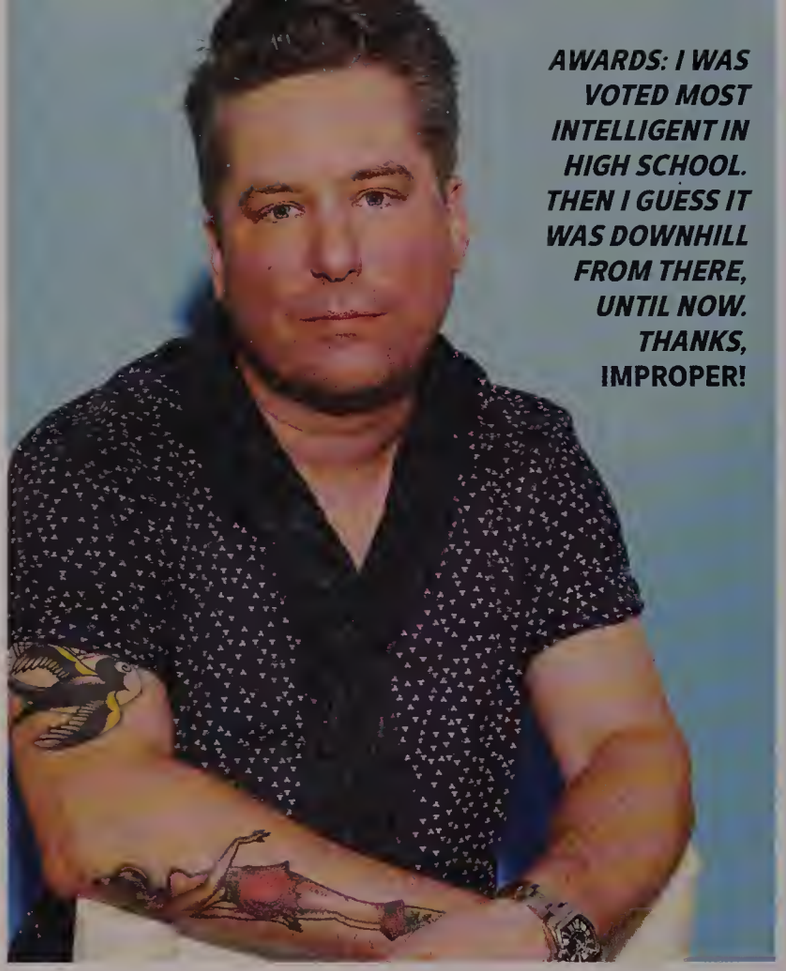
Health insurance program manager

CHARITABLE INVOLVEMENT: I serve as co-chair for my company's recently formed LGBTQ+ business resource group. I volunteer annually for Community Servings' Pie in the Sky fundraiser. I've also participated in their LifeSavor event multiple times by manning one of the silent auction tables.

CATS OR DOGS: I'm the proud owner of a 13-year-old cat I've had since he was a kitten. He's a massive Maine coon and could give Sylvester a run for his money with his goofiness and giant cartoon eyes.

NERD ALERT: I'm a mega comic book fan and have been reading them since I was 10. I can name almost all of the X-Men's first appearances and even tell you what happens in an issue of Uncanny X-Men, just by seeing the cover. I've attended San Diego Comic-Con for 10 years—that's nerd mecca and the tickets are nigh impossible to get, in case you're wondering. I even got my most recent tattoo (bringing them to a total of seven) before coming home from San Diego last year.

FRUIT FETISH: Another major interest is bananas. Yes, the fruit. I love them so much I have one tattooed on my right shoulder.



CELEBRITY CRUSH: Russell Tovey. I discovered him as the nerdy, awkward and sexy werewolf George in the original British version of Being Human. It was love at first bite.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: Big ears. Don't ask why or how. They just do. If you've got big ears and a beard, odds are I'll ask you to make out.

DATING APP YOU USE THE MOST: Scruff. So much so that they sent me a branded pair of socks for being a "top user." Sorry. Not sorry.

WORST TRAIT: MY LOVE OF GLITTER. IF YOU DATE ME, YOU WILL FIND GLITTER ON YOU DAYS LATER AT SOME POINT.

GREG KITOWICZ, 42

Vice president at City Winery

CAREER PATH: I spent some post-college, formative years in Newport as a tennis pro, then was plucked to run one of the most famous nightclubs in New York. I've been in the entertainment/hospitality business ever since.

CHARITABLE INVOLVEMENT: We support a bunch of events through work. One of the more memorable was our support for marriage equality in Illinois and then hosting one of the first weddings. I also like to lend money on kiva.org, mostly to small bar owners in underprivileged countries.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I consider myself a good cook, but when your friends are world-class chefs, that's a tough statement to live up to. Still, I'm happy to steal from them. And although I don't enjoy playing anymore, I can still hit a 100 mph serve in tennis.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): It's all been crazy, to some extent. I'm a hopeless romantic. I go all in, pretty hard. I sold a business. I took on others' vision for my future. Lesson learned. There may also be some permanent tattoo ink.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: To paraphrase Sir Mix-A-Lot, "I like big butts, and I cannot lie."

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: The ocean. Not in it, just next to it, listening.

WOULD YOU DATE ANYONE WHO DIDN'T LOVE WINE: Yes. The challenge to turn her would either become a life's mission, or it would force to me cut many calories from my diet. I'm OK with both.

IF YOU WERE A WINE VARIETAL, YOU WOULD BE: A New World cabernet sauvignon. Bold, complex, definitely not for everyone. Is it weird to say I would pair well with a steak?

WENDY JOY DIAMOND, 48

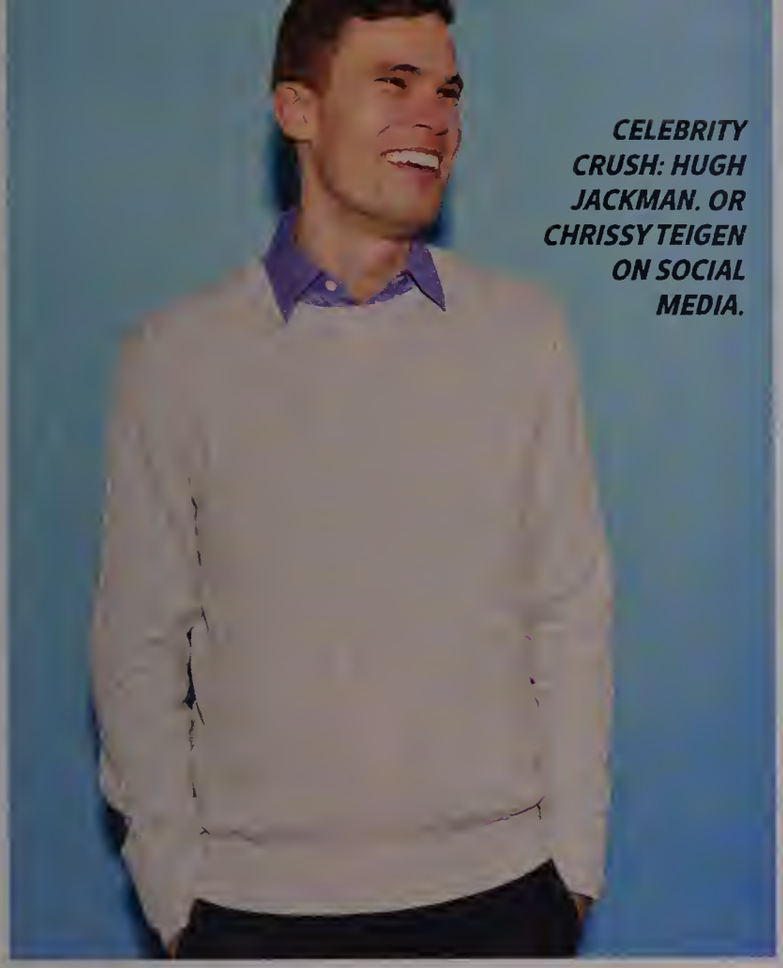
Registered nurse

PROFESSIONAL BONA FIDES: I have double bachelor's degrees in nursing and nutrition, and am a registered nurse and registered dietitian. I'm also a licensed and certified deep-tissue massage therapist. Basically, I'm a walking wellness center.

TO STAY FIT: I'm an avid fitness enthusiast, somewhat of a gym rat—weight training, mainly, but I tend to go through phases such as dance, boxing and cross-training.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I'm a self-taught, pretty freaking amazing home chef and cake decorator. I've sold cakes for special occasions for most of my adult life, done in-home cooking lessons and was almost on the first season of MasterChef. I've taken classes with some of the best chefs, and I grew up glued to Julia Child when all my friends were watching MTV.

BEST FEATURE: My eyes, but they tell all. I've been warned: No poker for me.



CELEBRITY CRUSH: Robert Downey Jr., for 30 years straight—even in his troubled times. I think I could have saved him.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): I agreed to jump out of an airplane. Amazingly, when I was up there, I wasn't scared—once my chute deployed.

DEAL BREAKER: No sense of humor. A sense of humor is a fairly good indicator that he has some interesting brain activity.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: Calling me by the wrong name. Once? Maybe OK. Twice? I'm finding a window in the ladies' room.

IF YOU WERE A WINE VARIETAL, YOU WOULD BE: Champagne. I look for things in life to celebrate, and I'm a little bubbly.

TYRUS BORCK, 28

Global program manager

PROVENANCE: I'm originally from Fort Worth, Texas, and I'll always be a Texan at heart. But Boston already feels like home, even though I've only lived here for a year.

SPORTS: I wanted to try something new when I moved to Boston and I was happy to learn about a water polo team, Boston Wet Sox. I had never been a swimmer or played water polo, but I figured it would be a great way to meet people. Treading water with people trying to drown you somehow feels easier than finding dates in a new city.

SPECTATOR SPORTS: I love college football, specifically Texas A&M. Growing up in Texas, football is everywhere, and Friday Night Lights is a pretty accurate depiction of a lot of my friends' high school experience.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I have completed two weeks' worth of home cooking from Hello Fresh with varying degrees of success.

BEST FEATURE: After my parents paid for five years of braces, I'm sure they'd be upset if I said anything other than my smile.

DEAL BREAKER: When someone invites you to binge a new show and then suggests going to lunch halfway through. We have made a commitment to this show That's why I brought snacks.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: Nothing. I've seen it all.

MOST DEPLORABLE CHARACTERISTIC IN OTHERS: An inability to load a dishwasher strategically.

MOST ROMANTIC THING IN THE WORLD: The fastest way to my heart is to send me the perfect gif. Not gift. GIF.

NATASHA MOUSTACHE, 35

Nightlife and event photographer

AWARDS: I recently won a Boston Music Award for Best Music Photographer, which I'm pretty proud of, because it's homegrown. Have you seen those awards? Beautifully designed.

TO STAY FIT: I like to keep in shape, but going to the gym everyday doesn't hold my attention. Recently, I had the opportunity to fight in my first boxing match at the House of Blues for Haymakers for Hope. It was four months of intense training while raising money for cancer research funds, and it was one of the best things I've ever done. Currently I'm addicted to spin, which is something I never thought I'd say, but the music is too good. I'm spinning to Hamilton tonight.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I'm a pretty good cook. I grew up making Seychellois curries with my mom, or whatever I could find in this kids' UNICEF cookbook I had, so sometimes I'll bust out a lamb curry at 2 am for a snack.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: I have to pay respects to Angelina Jolie. That woman's early film career got me through some tough baby queer years.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): I've driven to New York for just a few hours of face-time and flown someone cross-country for a Lady Gaga concert. Last-minute travel seems to be a recurring theme.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: It's a photographer's cliche, but I'm all about the eyes. Eyes and a smile—the way a person's lips curve when they smile. Drives me nuts.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: Photographing Garth Brooks for Garth Brooks Anthology: The First Five Yeors. I can't explain what it means to me to have my name listed in the credits of that book.

BARON BUI, 25

Manager at Ruckus Noodles

CAREER PATH: I received my bachelor's degree in graphic design from UMass Boston, and I do the digital design work for three restaurants (Shojo, BLR and Ruckus), which allows me to flex my graphic design muscles. I created the websites and keep them updated for all three spots. I also create promotional flyers and posters for events, signage on the windows for Ruckus, all the menus for the restaurants, clothing and uniform designs, etc.

HOBBIES: I'm a huge sneaker-head and hype clothing collector. Supreme is my favorite. I also love winter in New England purely for snowboarding. I try to go a few times a month during the season. I'm also a closet nerd, especially when it comes to video games. Hip-hop music is my favorite, with house music following as a close second. I love to dance to both genres, and I've been cutting a rug since I was very young.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I speak Vietnamese fluently but my reading and writing doesn't go much beyond food items. My Japanese and Spanish could get me to the nearest civilization if I was lost. And I'm a master of a bunch of useless party tricks.

BEST FEATURE: My smile.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Gal Gadot

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: Eyes I could get lost in make me stammer.

FIRST DATE AGENDA: Do some sort of activity, like seeing a concert or bowling.

THING THAT A POTENTIAL PARTNER WOULD HAVE TO UNDERSTAND: I consider myself an extroverted introvert; so while I love having a good time on a night out, I heavily value quiet time alone as well.

NICKY ENRIQUEZ, 32

Digital media producer at MassArt

PROFESSIONAL BONA FIDES: I manage the college's website and social media, but I moonlight as a substitute librarian at Watertown Free Public Library in my spare time. I'm a bit of a workaholic, but I love both organizations.

CHARITABLE INVOLVEMENT: I'm a member of the MassCreative Leadership Council. I've been a volunteer with Boston Cares for nearly 10 years, and I also volunteer with the Boston Book Festival.

AWARDS: A few years ago, I won a poetry contest by the New York Public Library.

IN YOUR SPARE TIME: I'm always looking forward to my next getaway. In the past few years, I've traveled to Morocco, the Canary Islands, Madrid, Norway, Barcelona, Paris, London, Puerto Rico, Grand Cayman and domestically as well. The world is such a big place, and there's so much to see and experience.

BOOKWORM CRED: I'm a voracious reader. My goal is to read 65 books this year. I also regularly attend author talks in town and love getting lost while browsing in bookstores.

BEST FEATURE: I'd say my smile, but former beaus have admired other bits.

CELEBRITY CRUSH: Joseph Gordon-Levitt

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): After rekindling with an ex at a mutual friend's wedding, I flew across the country to be with him. It—unsurprisingly—ended in a deluge of tears and a hastily booked flight back home.

FAVORITE FLOWER: Peonies. They blossom from a tiny bud into expansive, fragile petals, with the most enticing scent. They seem kind of magical.

MICHAEL ZARREN, 40s

Assistant GM and lead counsel of the Boston Celtics

CAREER PATH: A lifelong Celtics fan and season ticket holder, I'm now in my 14th year with the team, after starting as an unpaid intern. My specialty is advanced statistical analysis of basketball players and teams, which is an important part of our strategic planning and player evaluation processes.

LEGAL EAGLE: At Harvard Law, I served as editor-in-chief of the Harvard Journal of Law and Technology. I also served as a law clerk on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, and as an intern in the U.S. attorney's office in New York.

AWARDS: I was a three-time national quiz bowl (trivia) champion in college.

HOBBIES: Food, red wine, Boston sports, Arsenal soccer, sailing and international travel. I also adore finding new restaurants.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I speak French. I played drums in a bunch of bands. I'm a published board game designer. And I can fix your dryer.

BEST FEATURE: Exuberance. I get excited about little things.

CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): Had a day off from a work trip in California, so I flew back to Boston to bring my girl some cozy fuzzy slippers because she was sick, and then flew back out west.

DEAL BREAKER: Cigarettes. The smell gets on everything.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: If she only wanted to talk about the Celtics.

MOST ROMANTIC PLACE IN THE WORLD: White Bay Beach, Peter Island, British Virgin Islands. But a fireplace, a cozy couch and some red wine isn't bad either.

KRISTEN FENNELL, 34

Healthy living director at the YMCA

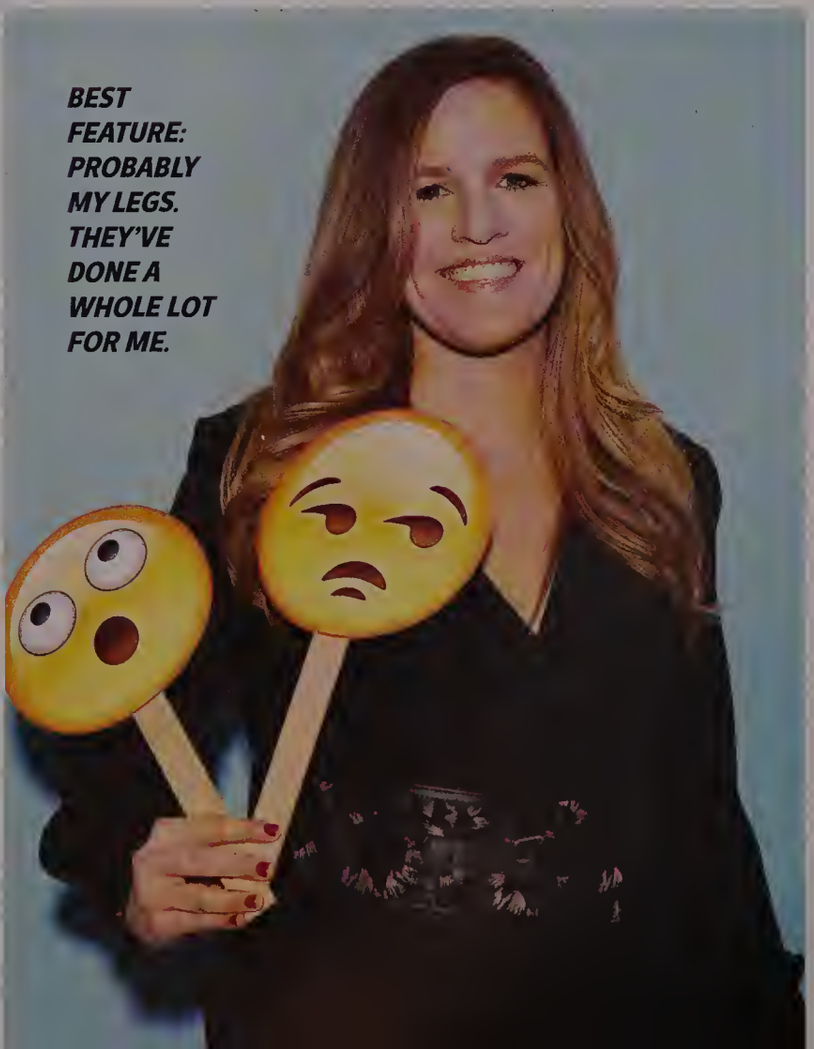
CAREER PATH: In addition to leading a team of roughly 70 employees, I'm a certified personal trainer and group exercise instructor. In the spring, I'll be facilitating the Livestrong program, which offers post-rehabilitation exercises and supportive care for cancer survivors.

CHARITABLE INVOLVEMENT: The Last Call Foundation, honoring firefighter Michael Kennedy, selected me to run on its Boston Marathon team in 2015 and 2017, and I was able to raise more than $15,000 for the charity.

HOBBIES: I've completed 10 marathons, including Boston twice. I'm hoping to run New York, but on my bucket list is the original marathon in Greece.

SPECIAL SKILLS: I may have participated in a couple of karaoke contests.

CELEBRITY CRUSHES: Jude Law, Jon Hamm and Jason Momoa.



CRAZIEST THING YOU EVER DID FOR LOVE (OR LUST): Shortly after college, I snuck off to the Dominican Republic with a boyfriend that no one in my family knew about. I made sure no one was home when he picked me up to go to the airport.

PHYSICAL TRAIT THAT DRIVES YOU CRAZY IN A GOOD WAY: Height. I love a tall drink of water.

DEAL BREAKER: Disliking kids. I have 11 nieces and nephews and was a nanny for a long time.

FIRST DATE FAUX PAS: Finding out my date doesn't like pizza.

PROUDEST ACHIEVEMENT: Participating in a Reebok documentary with my friends while we ran from San Francisco to Napa Valley.

MOVIES

EARLY MAN★★★ British animator Nick Park, creator of Wallace & Gromit, makes a welcome return to directing after a 10-year absence with the surprising Early Man. The title does indeed refer to our cave-dwelling ancestors, and as you might have guessed, dinosaurs even make an appearance—just long enough to be wiped out by a meteor during the stop-motion animated movie's opening moments. But what's really shocking is where Park and his screenwriters go from here: After the prologue explains that the meteor responsible for the dino-pocalypse is about the same size as a soccer ball, the surviving cavemen naturally use it in their creation of a "sacred game" known everywhere but the U.S. as "football." (You might want to explain the world's football/soccer dichotomy to your kids before taking them.) Fast-forward to the Bronze Age, when a tribe of dimwitted rabbit-hunters is chased from the forests that sprang up within the meteor's crater by a more advanced civilization led by the Gallic-accented Lord Nooth (voiced by Tom Hiddleston). Unwilling to accept his tribe's banishment to the volcanic Badlands, a young dreamer named Dug (Eddie Redmayne) challenges Nooth's best football team to a match against the cavemen, with the winners poised to receive permanent land rights. And while Park doesn't hit the goal as flawlessly as in the past, Early Man is nearly as charming and punny as you'd expect from the director of Chicken Run. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.) / Brett Michel

Den of Thieves ★★★ You'd never guess that a crime thriller opening in the dumping ground of January and starring Gerard Butler would be any good. The entire notion of such a project succeeding sounds about as plausible as this film's heist at the Los Angeles branch of the Federal Reserve. Still, while writer/director Christian Gudegast (co-writer of Butler vehicle London Has Fallen and son of The Young and the Restless' Eric Braeden) may have cooked up a warmed-over version of Michael Mann's Heat, it ends up tastier than expected. Beefier-than-usual Butler does his best Mel Gibson impression as "Big Nick" Flanagan, the perennially hungover head of a hard-boiled unit within the LA Sheriff's Department, one that's determined to take down a group of former military ex-cons led by Merriman (Pablo Schreiber, Liev's half-brother, making a strong impression), who's clearly jazzed by the prospect of robbing the federal government. Rounding out Merriman's titular den of thieves is right-hand man Levi (Curtis "50 Cent" Jackson) and new driver Donnie (O'Shea Jackson Jr., the son of Ice Cube, best known for portraying his dad in Straight Outta Compton). Making his debut behind the camera, Gudegast proves adept at staging action. Sure, his shootouts don't quite hit the Michael Mann target, but driven by Cliff Martinez's pulsating score, they still provide a visceral thrill that's only occasionally let down by the film's long length. And despite a number of narrative implausibilities along the way, the film's coda delivers an unexpectedly satisfying kick. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Film Stars Don't Die in Liverpool ★★1/2 Unless they're avid fans of Turner Classic Movies, most modern audiences probably don't remember Gloria Grahame's 9-minute-long, Oscar-winning role in 1952's The Bad and the Beautiful, though they'd likely recall her even briefer turn as Violet, the bad-girl blonde who laughs at the wide-eyed romanticism of George Bailey (Jimmy Stewart) in the holiday classic It's a Wonderful Life. Despite her Academy Award, the actress never enjoyed the success of, say, Marilyn Monroe. But like that iconic bombshell, Grahame also died young. After numerous failed marriages, she died of cancer in 1981 at the age of 58, after spending time in the Liverpool home of Peter Turner's parents. In the new film by Paul McGuigan (director of Wicker Park) that's based on Turner's memoir, the small-time actor who is 30 years Grahame's junior is played by Billy Elliot's Jamie Bell. But the real appeal of this film that details Grahame's final days is with the actress who plays her: Annette Bening. Luminous as always, you can't take your eyes off her, despite a game turn by Bell as the man who forges a strong bond with Grahame during her final love affair. A May-December romance is nothing new in Hollywood, though it's nice to see the roles reversed, with an older woman seducing a much younger man. Still, one wishes the sentimental film rose to the standards of Bening—and Grahame. (At Kendall Square.)

I, Tonya ★★ This smug satire was recently nominated for three Oscars, among them Margot Robbie's Best Actress nod for her fierce turn as Tonya Harding and Allison Janney's one-note, yet enjoyable supporting role as the disgraced Olympian's harridan mother. While I, Tonya wants desperately to be the Goodfellas of figure skating movies, director Craig Gillespie (Lars and the Real Girl) is less Martin Scorsese and more American Hustle's David O. Russell—which is to say that it feels like a copy of a copy, since Gillespie lacks the tonal or character control of either. But boy, does he like deploying classic rock needle-drops. Based on what the film calls wildly contradictory interviews with the real Harding and her ex-husband Jeff Gillooly, the script by Steven Rogers (writer of romantic schmaltz like Hope Floats, Kate & Leopold and P.S. I Love You) presents the tabloid tale that led to Nancy Kerrigan's kneecapping as a mockumentary of sorts, with most of the major players (including Sebastian Stan as Gillooly and Paul Walter Hauser as Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckhardt) donning bad makeup and even worse wigs to comment on the events surrounding the 1994 scandal from a present-day perspective. As these unreliable narrators break the fourth wall for comedic punctuation, we watch Tonya as she grows from a child prodigy into the trash-talking smoker who'd be a total embarrassment if she weren't so talented. Critical of the sensationalism that the Kerrigan assault spawned, the movie's equally guilty of classist navel-gazing. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Seaport and in the suburbs.)

The Insult ★★★ Similar to what he did in his last film, The Attack, a drama involving a Palestinian man investigating his wife's death in a suicide bombing, Lebanese director Ziad Doueiri once again looks at complex events through the lens of modern Arab identity. Set in contemporary Beirut and focusing on two men, The Insult is set in motion over a protruding drainpipe that's not up to code. Yasser Salameh (Kamel El Basha)—a Palestinian refugee and construction foreman tasked with fixing building violations in an insular community—is accidentally soaked as Christian resident and mechanic Tony Hanna (Adel Karam) waters the plants on his balcony. When Tony brushes off Yasser's offer to fix the pipe, Yasser begins the repair anyway, a move that causes Tony to lash out and destroy the handyman's work. Flustered, Yasser responds with, well, gutter language. Things go downhill after Yasser refuses to apologize when his boss tries to broker peace between them, until the hotheaded Tony spews a racially charged insult that prompts a physical response. A couple of broken ribs and two court cases later, the country is a powder keg, with tensions between Muslims and Christians about to explode. As an allegory, this Oscar nominee for the Best Foreign Language Film is more contrived than credible, but the two actors are so strong that you'll likely overlook its more heavy-handed flaws. (At Kendall Square.)

Maze Runner: The Death Cure ★★ Based on a series of young adult novels by James Dashner, the Maze Runner movies haven't made much of a cultural mark, though Wes Ball's first film was rather enjoyable when it opened in 2014—for as long as it remained inside the titular mysterious, walled-in labyrinth anyway. Once the heroic amnesiac Thomas (American Assassin's Dylan O'Brien) and his fellow, equally memory-deficient young "Gladers" escaped from the maze during the film's third act, the plot was revealed to have something to do with a plague-ravaged, post-apocalyptic society—similar to the one in the Divergent series of books and film adaptations. And not only was Ball's sequel (2015's Maze Runner: The Scorch Trials) forgettable, the plots and characters of the Maze Runner and Divergent universes are easily conflated with the relatively same cheap look and at least one actress (Rosa Salazar) playing gun-toting tough gals in both. Nevertheless, it's clear that former visual effects artist Ball has steadily grown as a director, since The Death Cure includes some action sequences that are well put together. Now, if he can get his hands on a decent script—including characters worth caring about—he might just make something memorable. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Paddington 2 ★★★★ You might not generally look to a family film for arch commentary on the modern state of immigration in these post-Brexit days, but director Paul King's second instant classic about a talking, marmalade-loving bear who's settled into London living after leaving the jungles of "darkest Peru" provides it nonetheless. When King's first adaptation of Michael Bond's beloved Paddington Bear books gently ribbed British audiences' anxieties about the growing refugee crisis three years ago, it was simply subtext for the delightful yarn the director had cooked up for the polite, furry little mammal's big-screen bow. But in the era of Trump, it doesn't matter that our pint-sized émigré hero (once again voiced by Ben Whishaw and given magical, computer-animated form in a live-action world) has successfully integrated into a multicultural neighborhood after being taken in by the kindly Brown family. Falsely imprisoned for the theft of a rare pop-up book he'd been saving up to buy as a gift for his beloved Aunt Lucy (voiced by Imelda Staunton), Paddington spends much of the film behind bars. His adopted family—led by stuffy risk analyst Henry (Downton Abbey's Hugh Bonneville) and his sunny wife, children's book illustrator Mary (The Shape of Water's Sally Hawkins)—does all they can to prove his innocence, while the real culprit—dandy actor and master of disguise Phoenix Buchanan (Hugh Grant, never better)—roams free. If this sounds a bit dark, bear in mind that Paddington 2 is never less than delightful, embracing the sweetness of Bond's source material. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Peter Rabbit ★★ Pity poor Peter Rabbit. As disposable kiddie fare, it wouldn't be half bad if not for the presence of the exceptional Paddington 2 in theaters right now. But then, Paddington director Paul King's Babe-level fable fundamentally understands what made Michael Bond's children's books work, while Will Gluck (director of 2014's misbegotten version of Annie) and co-screenwriter Rob Lieber would appear to never have cracked open any of Beatrix Potter's enjoyable texts. Less of an adaptation than a standalone story, Gluck's live action/photo-real animation hybrid takes place some time after The Tale of Peter Rabbit and The Tale of Benjamin Bunny. Peter's parents have both departed for lagomorph heaven, while his adventures into the garden of Mr. McGregor (Sam Neill) have become routine. And when Peter's nemesis also goes belly-up, the film treats McGregor's death as a laugh. In other words, don't expect much empathy from Peter. Voiced by The Late Late Show's James Corden, Peter is one of the least likable characters to hit screens since Alvin in the recent spate of Chipmunks movies. Unfortunately, on the likability scale, Peter gets competition from Mr. McGregor's nephew, Thomas (Star Wars: The Last Jedi's Domhnall Gleeson), who inherits the old man's estate. If it weren't for the calming presence of Rose Byrne as rabbit-friendly neighbor Bea (along with Margot Robbie as the voice of Flopsy, Elizabeth Debicki as Mopsy, Daisy Ridley as Cotton-Tail and Colin Moody as Benjamin Bunny), spending time with these battling jerks would be even more torturous. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Phantom Thread ★★★★ Reynolds Woodcock, the fictional couturier played by 60-year-old Daniel Day-Lewis in his second collaboration with writer/director Paul Thomas Anderson (There Will Be Blood), is a man who needs women in his life. While the ghost of the mother, who taught Reynolds his trade, remains close to his heart (he's secretly stitched locks of her hair into the breast of his jacket), it's his sister Cyril (Lesley Manville) who handles the 1950s affairs of London's House of Woodcock—sometimes literally, as when she steps in to terminate her hypersensitive younger brother's short-lived relationships with the live-in lovelies who briefly serve as his muses. Reynolds is a man ruled by routine, so it doesn't take him long to meet a new paramour after Cyril has dismissed his latest companion during the film's opening moments. Traveling to his country estate, Reynolds catches the eye of clumsy young waitress Alma (34-year-old Luxembourgian Vicky Krieps) during a stop at a seaside cafe. To say more would do a disservice to the devilish pleasures derived from watching the plot unfold, but it becomes clear that Reynolds has met his match. Shockingly, the chameleonic Day-Lewis has said that this will be his final role. If so, then he's gone out on a high note. Almost as shocking, the little-known Krieps has accomplished the unfathomable, going toe-to-toe with the three-time Oscar winner. This is also a credit to Anderson's exceptional script, which pays homage to the gothic romance of Alfred Hitchcock's Rebecca (1940), from its midcentury glamour to the triangular dynamic of its characters. Prepare to be hemmed in. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Seaport, Somerville and in the suburbs.

Winchester ★ Has a gun manufacturer ever been haunted by guilt about gun violence? Today, that's a loaded question, but how about in 1906? This latest bit of nonsense from German twins Peter and Michael Spierig (directors of last year's horror misfire, Jigsaw) attempts to provide an answer by positing literal hauntings at the center of this tale that's been billed as "inspired by true events." Truth, as it turns out, must have been just as elusive a century ago as it is in the age of Trump. I sincerely hope Academy Award-winner Helen Mirren was at least paid well for attempting to class up this claptrap in her role as Sarah Winchester, heiress to the Winchester fortune. Moving to an isolated stretch of land in San Jose, California, in 1886, the black-clad widow purchased an eight-room farmhouse and then—according to the Spierigs and their co-writer Tom Vaughan—she proceeded to burn through her inheritance as she transformed the property into a seven-story manse containing hundreds of cavernous rooms, built by workers who toiled 24 hours a day, seven days a week for decades, seemingly without a blueprint. Was she crazy? That's what Dr. Eric Price (Jason Clarke) is hired by Winchester's board of directors to find out, for perhaps dubious reasons. But then, the good doctor's laudanum addiction might not make him the best judge—especially when he begins seeing the same apparitions that Lady Winchester is convinced are the ghosts of those killed by her family's products. As fiction, this isn't a terrible target. Too bad the Spierigs didn't have better aim. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

ELECTRIC ENTRANCE

Up-and-coming R&B singer Kelela gathered buzz in the music industry after releasing an EP and mixtape in 2013. In her debut studio album, Take Me Apart, the first-name-only musician introduces strong but airy vocals that build to electronic beats. The Maryland native chronologically breaks down the life of a relationship throughout the tracks, including "Onanon," which lets listeners in on the songstress' secret—"It's not a breakup, it's just a breakdown." Before the artist serenades crowds at SXSW, Coachella and Governors Ball, power through a night at Royale with Kelela on Feb. 26. / Brynne Crawley

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

BURIED TREASURES Dubbed a "living treasure" by the Australian Design Centre in 2010, contemporary goldsmith Robert Baines will have some of his finest work on display at MassArt in the aptly named Living Treasure and Fabulous Follies. The jewelry exhibition showcases more than 70 glittering ornaments, including his teal-tinted Hey True Blue brooch. As with most of his creations, Baines fashioned the piece seen above using ancient European metalworking practices to manipulate contemporary materials. With more than 40 years of experience, Baines' designs bridge the past with the present. Uncover this gem at the Bakalar & Paine Galleries through March 3. / Imogen O'Brien

GRAY MATTERS

Each of the stories in Vandana Singh's Ambiguity Machines: and other Stories shows a universe filled with thrilling technologies. The physics professor transports readers from corporate prisons to the courtyards of Italian churches where her characters grapple with consequences of technologies that are morally gray—as her title suggests. Singh's machines gaze into the past to try to save a world ravaged by climate change and offer glimpses of a collective consciousness, but the most thrilling aspects of her stories are the diverse characters: faceted, flawed and fully human. Gear up when the author heads to Porter Square Books on Feb. 15—and visit improper.com for a Q&A with Singh ahead of the reading. / Nathan Tavares

THE JOYS OF MOTHERHOOD

As the social season begins to warm up, fashion plates and philanthropists descended upon Bloomingdale's in Chestnut Hill for a kickoff event benefitting Dress for Success.

The evening of shopping, sipping, snacking and schmoozing took place in the designer collections section, and guests also combed the racks in the store's new private shopping salon, The Vault. Front and center: Bloomie's head hottie Matt Dunphy, the charity's head honcho Kim Todd, wonder woman Janaial Robinson, stylist to the stars Holly Soule Horvath, former first lady Angela Menino with her stunning daughter, Susan Fenton, the latter's handsome husband, Bill, fashionisti David Josef and Danny Forrester, rainmaker Erica Corsano, radio redhead Kennedy Elsey, banking babe Denise Wolffs, fashion icon Doris Yaffe, the achingly lovely Simone Winston, the evening's models, Luz Vargas and Beverly Walters, the flawless Kenlyn Jones, retail babes Whitney McLeod and Jessica Reed, and one woman who greeted a male attendee by saying, "I didn't recognize you with your clothes on."

Apropos for a fashion event, Todd told the following joke during her remarks: "What did zero say to the number eight? Nice belt."

However, the evening's drollest remark came from the woman who said, "I've told my kids: If you didn't get arrested and aren't in the hospital, don't text me after 9 pm."

NOT YOUR GRANDDADDY'S FUNDRAISER

Big-ticket charity gigs where it's cool to wear jeans and a T-shirt are few and far between. Add top-flight entertainment, an open bar, delicious little nibbly things and a top-notch crowd, and it's no surprise why Big Night—the annual blowout to benefit Big Brothers Big Sisters of Massachusetts Bay—managed to raise almost $2 million.

The anxiously awaited evening, held at the House of Blues, featured performances by white-hot bands Misterwives, Saint Motel and Matoma, and began with a VIP reception, a meet-and-greet and an acoustic set in the Foundation Room, followed by a high-octane evening of music and general mayhem.

Present and accounted for: Honorees Margot and Jonathan Davis, co-chairs Bill Meara, Tim Dibble and Chris Mitchell, emcees Jenny Johnson and Billy Costa, party pair Kate Lubin and Glendon Sutton, investment banking bigwig Jeff Leerink and the stunning Kristi, IT entrepreneur Kevin Routhier, the organization's skipper, Wendy Foster, uber do-gooder Gerald Chertavian, financial whiz Frank Petz and the gorgeous Abby, board chair Paula Price, mega-philanthropists Sandy and Paul Edgerley and Phill and Liz Gross, the evening's speaker, Allen Arseneau, and one person who said, "Someone asked me what the attire for this evening was. I said, bikinis to bowties. Anything goes."

Although there were no bikinis visible, there was plenty of designer denim, and the rafters shook until the cows came home.

The evening's choicest remark: "I love this party because once I tell my kids about the bands I saw, I suddenly become cool for a second and a half." ◆

STROKES OF STYLE

MOST OF WHAT I KNOW OF the fashions from centuries ago I learned by looking at paintings in museums. There's Winslow Homer's affection for wide-brimmed hats, Rembrandt's masterpieces showing off frumpy frills and ruffles and John Singer Sargent's paintings with women in flowing dresses—and sometimes plunging necklines. I expect if I took a time machine back to the 17th or 19th centuries, all of the folks would look exactly like those artists portrayed them. And so it's fitting that style and art intersect in the present day for our Spring Fashion issue. Photographed at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, this feature by Lydia Santangelo gives a peek into the sheer and transparent styles you can expect in stores this season.

If you like your fashion stories a bit more fictional, Jonathan Soroff gets the deets from up-and-coming actress Meghann Fahy, who shot to notoriety in The Bold Type, a TV show inspired by a former editor of Cosmopolitan. Elsewhere in the magazine, Hilary Sargent rounds up a trio of authors who are touting their first books, Nathan Tavares chats with a Scituate native in town for a national tour of The Humans, and Marissa Angelone pulls together some swag to show off your girl power on International Women's Day. Not your taste? Cathryn Haight gets the first sip at a new teahouse in Coolidge Corner that has a powerhouse local trio behind it. Here's hoping this issue goes down as smooth as one of their matcha drinks.

GREEN WITH ZEN-VY

GO GREEN
Treadway helms the tea program that highlights the earthy, light and slightly briny taste of Japanese green tea, which is credited to the farms' close proximity to the ocean. He's fine-tuned each brew down to the second of steeping and degree of temperature, and recommends the pleasantly savory, vibrant green umami blend as a mellow crowd-pleaser—the more adventurous should go for the rich and rounded kokumi blend.

Tea-lightful

MATCHA, MATCHA MAN
Matcha finds its way into multiple areas of the menu but is the star of the show in the matcha soda (pictured on page 9). The concoction, available in honey, grapefruit and ginger flavors, combines a housemade syrup that uses evaporated cane sugar from Ipswich's Privateer Rum with matcha concentrate and soda. Treadway says, "It's not too sweet, but the sensation is like drinking a fresh soda with a pleasant dryness at the end."

When Japan's Harada Tea commissioned Haruo Abe to expand its 100-year-old family business to the U.S., he wanted Gen Sou En—which opened in Coolidge Corner on Feb. 21—to have a local touch. So Abe hired a load of talent: Joe Cammarata (formerly of Hojoko and Backbar) as general manager and sake enthusiast, Sam Treadway (co-owner of Backbar) as tea master and assistant general manager, and Yozo Masuyama (formerly of Clear Flour Bread) as head baker. The well-known team is honing in on Japanese green tea by highlighting three distinct flavor profiles: umami, mild and savory; kokumi, rich and lingering; and shibumi, bright and intense. This trio is also the backbone of the greater menu, which pairs seasonal dishes with each tea. The 125-seat space features clean lines blended with traditional elements, including a ceremony room and a live tree meant to evoke the gardens found in ancient teahouses. Gen Sou En—which means "farm to cup"—also boasts a 10-seat area to host monthly classes such as matcha-making, where a teacher will demonstrate how the green goodness is made while participants whisk it in their own bowls. "We're a tea company first," Cammarata says. "We're really proud of the way they make tea in Japan and we're bringing that here and using that as the foundation of the company." / Cathryn Haight

SWEET DEAL
Masuyama showcases traditional Japanese treats such as taiyaki (pictured) along with creative offerings, like a matcha roll cake—filled with pastry cream, whipped cream and condensed milk—and a Japanese souffle cheesecake that's made lighter than its American counterpart by separating the egg yolks and whites during the whisking process.

SAKE IT TO ME
Cammarata crafted the three-cup sake menu to be first-timer-friendly by opting for chilled "easy drinking" picks that fit Gen Sou En's three flavor profiles. His favorite, Kikusui Yodan Jikomi, exhibits subtle notes of fruit.

CAROLINA ON MY MIND: Chef Jason Cheek brings Southern dishes to the South End

First Taste / Julia Aparicio

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE

A FAMILY-STYLE SOUTHERN RESTAURANT COMES TO THE SOUTH END

SOUTHERN PROPER
600 Harrison Ave., Boston
southernproperboston.com

Chef Jason Cheek—formerly of Toro and KO Prime—is bringing his Southern roots to the South End. Check, who was born and raised in North Carolina, will serve authentic low country cuisine when his first solo venture, Southern Proper, opens its doors on March 1.

"This will not be a barbecue joint," Cheek says. "I realize that a lot of times when people hear 'Southern restaurant' they think barbecue. I'm not going to deprive them of that—we will have smoked items on the menu—but we're not set up as a barbecue joint, so to speak."

Taking up residence in new apartment complex the Girard, Southern Proper will meld old and new, with decor comprising of family photos, antiques and raw timber and wood shipped in from North Carolina so that, as Cheek explains, "it's got that smell to it." Even the bar has a history, the top made using cut and seared vintage dinner tables with a tin wraparound sourced from an old movie theater in upstate New York.

"We've gone through a lot of great pains and trials making sure we're getting a lot of antique stuff in here," Cheek says.

The menu will focus on low country cuisine and authentic fare from the Piedmont region, starring family-style dining options like whole racks of pork and fried chicken. There's also an assortment of contemporary twists, like the hush puppies—corn fritters made using flour, cornmeal, soured corn and buttermilk that are fried and served with fresh honey butter—as well as the pimento cheese, made by mixing peppers, sharp cheddar and mayonnaise, and served with lavender popovers and spicy pepper jam.

The bar program is spearheaded by beverage director Katie Gilroy and will include several taps of local beers, an array of brown spirits and drinks such as the Pinochle. That draft cocktail is inspired by Cheek's childhood and is made using rye whiskey washed with peanuts before it's mixed with cola and served in a vintage glass bottle.

With seating for 90 inside and an additional 30 expected on the patio, Cheek hopes he can recreate more than just Southern dishes inside his restaurant. He's hoping to bring out some of the hospitality that's synonymous with the region he grew up in.

"This is a very comfortable Southern restaurant," Cheek says. "We are dedicated to crafting kindness."

Good Eats: Bowled Over

After up-and-down weather swings this winter, Oak + Rowan offers a bowl of sustained warmth. "This tajarin is reminiscent of an upscale version of chicken noodle soup—perfect for cold season—but made with handmade noodles and braised rabbit, which is a low-calorie protein with nearly no fat or cholesterol," executive chef Justin Shoults says of the new dinner dish at the Fort Point eatery. This recent menu addition features poached carrots, saffron, caramelized fennel soffrito and shaved Parmesan, but the real treat is the tableside pour of the rich, soul-warming bone broth that will help beat back any lingering winter woes. / Nathan Tavares

BLANC ENDORSEMENTS

The first thing to check on a restaurant's wine list: if there are any chenin blancs—and which ones. Not only is it a go-to pre-dinner option, but it's also as versatile with food as that other marvel of white wine compatibility, riesling. Chenin's gracefulness derives from its bright acidity, clearly delineated fruit and hints of spice. Some added bonuses: It's moderate in price and it ages beautifully. And since this grape's charm is such a well-kept secret, these three bottles would also make a wonderful gift for white wine lovers looking to discover something new. / Sandy Block

RAATS ORIGINAL UNWOODED CHENIN BLANC, STELLENBOSCH, 2017

More than half of the world's chenin blanc is grown in South Africa, and winemaker Bruwer Raats is one of the country's most accomplished specialists. Sandstone and decomposed granite soils make for a crisp and fleshy wine with juicy peach, citrus and baking spice notes. This is broader on the palate and softer in texture than the French originals, and its supple fruit flavors are delicious with grains and roasted root vegetables.

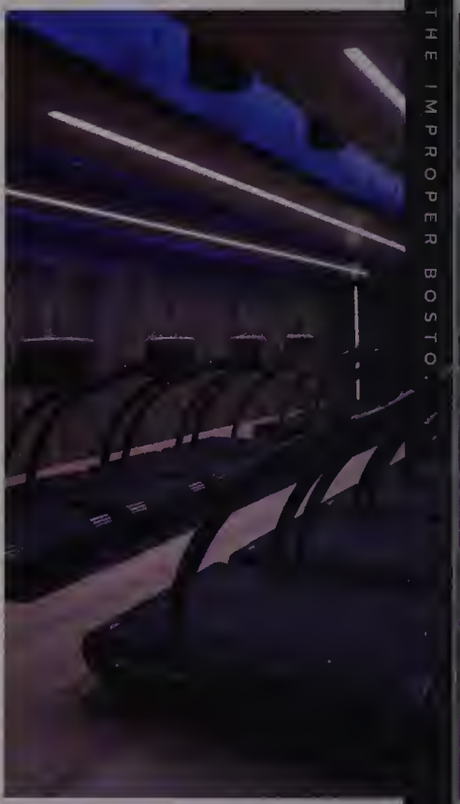
LAURENT KRAFT, VOUVRAY, 2015

From vineyards in Touraine due east of Savennières, this seventh-generation producer makes wine that's a bit gentler and more honeyed, but no less beautifully structured. It's matured on the yeast—no oak aging here—so your palate will take note of the limestone soils, which impart a refreshing chalky salinity, and you might taste a touch of sugar as well. Pair it with mildly spicy Asian dishes.

$18, Coolidge Liquors

DOMAINE DES BAUMARD, SAVENNIÈRES, 2015



This bone-dry chenin has impeccable bloodlines, coming from a family estate whose owners have been working rocky soils near Anjou since 1634. In 2015, the grapes ripened more fully than in a normal year, but the wine remains bracing and minerally. With lime, pear and almond aromas, this Savennières is intense and concentrated, and its long, stony finish makes it a natural pick for shellfish.

$30, Marty's, Newton

Cool Running

A few years ago, treadmill studios started opening across Boston, setting the pace ahead of your gym's lonely few machines. But now Equinox aims to stride ahead of that pack with its new Precision Running Lab in Chestnut Hill. The location is the fitness chain's second lab in the country and its semi-private classes will include colored light cues that pair with an instrumental music playlist and change colors based on your run—red when you're striving for top intensity and blue when you're cooling down. The lab also features an oxygen vaporizer that aims to reduce nitrogen and freshen the air, but one of the biggest draws is the actual running machines. The touch-screen Woodway treadmills are connected to your online profile and can recall your last three speeds and inclines, allowing for smoother interval transitions during a run. With 60-minute classes open to the public ($30) as well as some members-only sessions, you might need to sprint to get a spot. / Matt Martinelli

HUMANS INSTINCT

PLAEHN VIEW: The Scituate native stars in Tony-winning dramedy The Humans.

Therese Plaehn has certainly been busy since her days performing in musicals at the all-girls Notre Dame Academy in Hingham. "I was really tall so I'd play, like, Rooster in Annie," she says with a laugh. With roles on Broadway and in film under her belt, Plaehn's starring in the national tour of Stephen Karam's comedy-drama The Humons as whipsmart lawyer Aimee. We caught up with her before she hits the Boch Shubert Theatre stage on March 13–25. / Nothon Tavores

WHAT WAS YOUR EARLY EXPERIENCE IN THE BOSTON THEATER SCENE LIKE? The first play I did there was The Well of the Soints, which is a John Millington Synge play that I did with the Súgán Theatre Company, an Irish theater company. That was a really wonderful experience with such incredible actors. And I've worked at the [American Repertory Theater]. I went to grad school at A.R.T. and I did Porodise Lost there and a bunch of institute shows. And then I did Our Town at the Huntington, which was David Cromer's production that he directed and came back to play the stage manager for part of it. And that was hugely eye-opening. It was such a huge cast, and so I was able to really get to know a lot more people in the Boston theater scene and realize what a special community it is with just some of the most talented people.

IS IT INTIMIDATING KNOWING THAT LOVED ONES ARE IN THE AUDIENCE WATCHING YOU? Oh yes. I prefer strangers to loved ones to perform for. [Laughs.] You just put a lot of pressure on yourself. And you know that people who love you want you to do well. It's a different game sometimes. I mean, I love it when everybody comes—don't get me wrong. But I definitely feel the pressure.

WHAT WAS IT LIKE TO WORK ON PROUD MARY LAST YEAR? Oh, that was fun! That was through Boston Casting. I had a scene with the two leads and they were shopping and I was a snobby saleswoman on Newbury Street.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR CHARACTER AIMEE IN THE HUMANS? She's a powerhouse. She's a lawyer. She's super smart and she's the most together of the Blake family members in a lot of ways. I see her as the glue that keeps everybody tension-free as much as possible. She's sort of the diplomat but she's also in this interesting position where she's the most vulnerable she's ever been in her life and she's at a family holiday.

IS IT MORE FUN TO PLAY SOMEONE WHO'S VASTLY DIFFERENT FROM YOU OR SOMEONE WHO'S SIMILAR? I think part of being an actor is that you have to find empathy in everyone and figure out what that kernel of empathy is and go from there. So I think both are interesting, but it's more fun to do the deep dive and try to solve a puzzle and think, "How do I hook into this person?" I think what's interesting is when you actually really connect with the language and the rhythm of the playwright and then it's sometimes easier to find the character. So because Stephen Karam is such a brilliant playwright and he hears dialogue so well—he's almost like a musician in the way that he's composed this play—he does a lot of the work. This is sort of a dream experience in tons of ways, but one of the ways is because of his language.

GOOD SORT

With the opening of Stasia Steele's the Little Details studio this month, you can get to know the people who'll be poking around your underwear drawer face-to-face. The professional organizer got into the biz seven years ago after the one-time nanny and personal assistant handled not one, but two moves within the same month. Now, she and four employees pack up belongings, track down handymen, keep renovations on time and even fly or drive to prepare a new home, in addition to helping families about to welcome babies or those looking to downsize. "Change is not easy for anyone, even when you're looking for that positive effect," Steele says. "You know it's going to be a better space, but it's still hard."

During after-hours workshops ($25–$100) in the North Cambridge space, she'll sit down with five participants to chat about everything from uncluttering digital files to tackling that funky angle in your closet. Visitors can also stock up on organizing supplies, including natural cleaning products, waterproof Eagle Creek shoe organizers and slim hangers. ALL IN THE FAMILY

A PERSONAL LOOK AT ONE MAN'S DEADLY LIFE ON THE STREET

by Danielle Allen
Published by W.W. Norton & Co., 223 pages, $25

Danielle Allen grew up as part of a tightknit black family that operated on both ends of the socioeconomic spectrum. A professor's daughter, she grew up with plenty of resources. Her cousin Michael, also intelligent and sensitive, was raised by his single mother who was often in abusive relationships. Danielle is now a political science professor at Harvard. Michael is now dead.

Danielle begins her book, Cuz: The Life and Times of Michael A., with her cousin's death and fills in the story with details from his troubling life. After confessing to some minor robberies, and an attempted carjacking during which he is shot, Michael is convicted and sentenced, at age 15, to 11 years in prison. With help from his family, he pursues an education inside jail, writing brainy papers and excitingly describing the firefighting work he does as a prisoner. Finally released, Michael once again blends in with gangs in LA and gets involved in drugs, eventually returning to prison and getting wrapped up in a fateful romance.

Modest about herself, Danielle writes with affection for Michael, describing his twists and lapses as well as his love of meditation and literature. She also fiercely condemns the ruinous laws and policies and the way gangs form what she calls a self-protective "parastate" that leads to inescapable trouble for many men ensnared by a life on the street. In the end, Danielle's love and advocacy could not overcome the strength of that parastate.

From page 105: "In this hell, where I have come across dozens of Virgils, Shakespeares, Martin Luther King Jr.s, Einsteins, Alex Haleys, and Dantes, I have a second chance. In this hell I am Dante. Dante was not in hell due to a fatal sin but somewhere in his life he strayed onto the path of error, away from his true self. I, K-10033, strayed away from my true self: Michael Alexander Allen." ◆

Something missing from your getaway? Baha Mar can arrange for off-site transportation.

LAP IT UP: The Baha Mar resort in the Bahamas offers more than just sunshine.

VAST RESORT

FIND EVERYTHING UNDER THE SUN AT NASSAU'S BAHA MAR

WHEN THE TEMPERATURES GO south, so should you. One layover and a hotel reservation stand between you and 1,000 acres' worth of Vitamin D to soak up at Baha Mar, the decade-in-a-making Nassau resort that debuted last spring, boasting 1,800 rooms and suites across two towers of the Grand Hyatt, in addition to the just-opened SLS for nightlife lovers and the soon-to-open uber-luxe Rosewood.

The main agenda: Wander your way to the beach. But do make a pit stop at the hot-pink El Jefe Airstream for a tater-tot-stuffed breakfast burrito you can top with one of the hot sauces from a crowded tray, before hunkering down along the nearly milelong stretch of private shoreline. The turquoise water is filled with a volleyball net, floating hammocks and vacationers zipping around on complimentary paddleboards, clear-bottom kayaks as well as snorkeling adventures through a manmade reef that's attracted blue tangs, bar jacks, barracuda and grouper. When you work up an appetite, you don't have to venture far from the sand to track down lunch at the pineapple-esque food truck that offers gourmet hot dogs, or grab a seat at the Conch Shack to watch a chef pluck the critter from a tank before it's prepared in front of you with onion, peppers and citrus.

For a change of scenery, hop from a round daybed in the middle of the Elixir pool to a rain cabana or a chair set in shallow water at the Drift pool. Find privacy at Elixir or fun at Dean's Blue Hole, which, modeled after the diving attraction 250 miles away, sports 8- and 15-foot ledges to jump from, plus a grotto with a sea creature-filled aquarium—and we're still leaving out a few.

If swimming up to pool bars doesn't count as exercise in your book, the fitness center offers core-centric classes, barefoot bootcamps and yoga. To get your sweat sesh outdoors, book one of the Racquet Club's many courts, including the only grass surface you'll find at a Bahamas resort—or opt for private lessons or daily walk-in drills. Should you prefer a little booze with your physical activity, the Jack Nicklaus-designed golf course serves a spiked lemonade water bottle at the 12th hole—and you may need that dose of liquid courage to take on the 16th: a downhill shot over Lake Cunningham onto a green peninsula. (If you miss it, come back tomorrow—the tees vary up to 100 yards from day to day to keep guests on their toes.)

With more than 20 bars and restaurants, you have a choice of watering holes for pre- or post-dinner drinks. There's the Lynden, whose bar is in the footprint of its namesake former prime minister's desk—never mind that he wasn't a drinker—and the Blue Note, where jazz musicians croon from an elevated stage behind the sleek bar lined with white-jacketed cocktail slingers. Get expert cigar and rum or whiskey pairings at T2, or settle down at Monkey Bar's throng of architectural seating for a serious case of design envy.

Upscale dining options include the Philippe Starck-designed Katsuya, where sushi lovers can nosh on the L.A. chef's signature crispy rice with spicy tuna and cook Wagyu beef at their table, and James Beard Award winner Michael Schwartz's Fi'lia, where you can see them cut sprigs of fresh herbs to toss into the house olive oil. Tucked behind wooden doors, there's 88 seats and 88 menu items at Shuang Ba, meaning double eights, a symbol of ultimate luck in Chinese culture. Dig into Peking duck and sip on baijiu cocktails—or get a taste of the strong spirit itself by ordering options like Moutai, the brand President Nixon swigged in '72 as the first U.S. president to visit China.

Test your luck and walk onto the 100,000-square-foot casino floor, the largest in the Caribbean, surrounded by floor-to-ceiling windows with views of the ocean. Hedge your bets by grabbing a lesson from one of the pit bosses who can school you in everything from blackjack to baccarat, though if you'd rather open your wallet to do some shopping, there's Rolex, Bulgari and plenty of other high-end boutiques to peruse. For some local flavor, pop into My Ocean for handmade soaps, ceramics and candles and then Tropic of Luxury, with a fully stocked limestone-walled Assouline library and goods from Bahamian-based designers, including straw bags and hats from Amanda Lindroth, kaftans made by Jeannie McQueeny and jewels from Alex Fraga.

But if there's one reason to leave the great outdoors, it's to visit the art space, the Current, led by director John Cox, whose The Fifth Season greets guests at the West Tower's check-in. The Nassau native, RISD grad and former chief curator of the National Art Gallery of the Bahamas has amassed a collection of 2,500 and counting pieces by Bahamian artists that are scattered throughout the resort. Check out the Current's monthlong mounted exhibitions and a schedule filled with workshops and other programming, such as figure drawing lessons and a 45-minute tour of the property that points out commissioned works. A roster of artists in residence spearheads some of the sessions, including Sue Katz. You can't really blame the native Bostonian for living and working in the Bahamas. In fact, you would do well to follow her lead. ◆

BUTTON PUSHER

BUTTONWOOD ADDS A STURDY LEG TO A SWEET SUBURBAN RESTAURANT EMPIRE

When chef/owner David Punch opened Sycamore in Newton Centre five years ago, it became an immediate sensation, bringing a big dose of culinary cleverness and cocktail sophistication to a sleepy suburban scene. Little Big Diner, his 2016 follow-up, added ramen, bao and other of-the-moment Asian delights in a modest, hip package just across the Green. His new restaurant Buttonwood, a mile away in Newton Highlands, further expands Punch's reach. It's another eclectic, relaxed American place with a witty beverage program in the mold of Sycamore, but leans less snout-to-tail, more Mediterranean. A few weeks in, it's not hard to see why it's packing in crowds.

Along with chef de cuisine Francisco Millan (ex-Row 34), Punch starts off with a series of spreads for topping excellent, oily grilled bread, like a fierce spicy whipped feta ($5), the less chili-forward but still complexly seasoned Berbere-spiced red lentils ($5), and the mild but still kicky roasted garlic and white bean ($4). Marinated octopus salad ($8) brings a gently briny accent and delicately tender texture. It's easy to imagine making a light meal of a couple of these with a glass of wine and maybe a salad.

Such salads include matchsticks of pear with celery ($12) showered with good, salty pecorino and walnuts, though it's overly acidic and overdressed with aged balsamic. Chopped beet salad ($13) with excellent Stilton, red grapes and hazelnuts is better: a vibrant, al dente gloss on an often rote, dull offering. Smoked fish fritters ($12) of flaked cod and smoked trout boast a nice greaseless fry job with plenty of crunch and a gentle smokiness, plus some spicy tartar sauce for dipping. Farro and parsnip soup ($9) with pancetta is made memorable by a superb golden chicken stock and a drizzle of intense pistou. A primo-sized plate of housemade gemelli with spicy tuna pomodoro ($14), given a little crunch with a sprinkle of bread crumbs, is absolutely sensational, the fish providing meaty heft and depth to a vivid tomato sauce.

Traditional entrees deliver exceptional value, as in the chorizo cazuela ($23), a meaty Spanish casserole with stewed chickpeas, swiss chard, prettily garnished hard-boiled egg and the kind of great, fresh sausages familiar to Sycamore fans. Moules frites ($21) offers a generous poundful of pristine mussels in a sharp, Alsatian-leaning bath of beer, mustard and caraway, plus really fine fries on the side. Compared to these, Portuguese fish stew ($27) is slightly underwhelming: the littlenecks gritty, the monkfish losing its lobster-ish chew and sweetness to poaching, the broth underseasoned, though a bright smear of garlicky aioli on grilled bread adds some interest. But then there's the roasted half-chicken ($22), a tribute in spirit and technique to Boston's bygone Hamersley's Bistro. It's air-dried and long-marinated, roasted and broiled, served with pepperonata slices and kale over polenta. A worthy evocation of one of Boston's most historic dishes, it's astonishingly fragrant, juicy and crisp-skinned.

The menu continues with simply grilled proteins accented with sharp sauces. Colossal shrimp ($34) spears four mega-prawns on a skewer and plates them in a puddle of eye-watering chili butter. Flank steak ($18) is a thinly sliced, modest 10 ounces with a bright, fierce chimichurri. Lamb kofte skewer ($21) comes off as undercooked and needing salt, helped a bit by tangy tzatziki. Meanwhile, whole branzino ($30) absolutely nails its preparation. It's perfectly, moistly cooked through, with a simple topping of herby salmoriglio and chopped escarole.

These naked plates need a side dish or two, and Buttonwood's are mostly tremendous, like nicely charred broccoli with a vivid salsa rossa ($8); a hefty casserole of grilled escarole with white beans and Caesar aioli ($8); a slab of slightly sweet cornbread and honey-Tabasco butter sprinkled with pepper ($6); and most notably the root vegetable gratin ($8) of sweet potatoes, celery root and parsnip—a cream-dosed, heavenly reimagining of scalloped potatoes. Punch's own lovely desserts include a slender wedge of dreamy chocolate cake ($10) with chopped peanut brittle and Toscanini's B3 ice cream and an airy warm bread pudding ($10) with sweetly tangy khulfee ice cream.

Bar manager Hugh Fiore (ex-Eastern Standard) has crafted 10 sophisticated specialty cocktails ($11-$13) and a nicely nerdy beer list (eight on tap, $6-$10; seven packaged, $5-$11). But the value-priced wine program may steal the spotlight, between its 17 glasses ($10-$14) and 38 bottles ($35-$95, most under $60) drawing mainly from deep-cut regions of Spain, Portugal and the U.S. It's a rare neighborhood-restaurant program that unearths little-seen Portuguese stunners like the 1990 Frei João (a steal at $65), which softened into subtle sublimity with a long aging. The room—44 dining seats, 14 bar seats, a few more at counters—is understatedly handsome, with its monochrome color palette, plain wooden tabletops, midcentury rec-room wood paneling and slate-blue upholstered banquettes, though noise can sail past lively toward painful at prime time. Service is exceptional by suburban standards with a waitstaff that's uniformly knowledgeable, amiable and efficient.

After a few meals here, I'm wondering if it's time to retire my surprise at finding Buttonwood's downtown level of polish, joy and excellence in the suburbs. After all, Boston's rents and licensing costs have been driving great independent talent outward for years now. That's fantastic news for the folks who live in long-restaurant-benighted Newton, and plenty of reason for us jaded city dwellers to venture far out on the D train. ◆

→ The Boston Center for the Arts shook things up at its annual Movers & Shakers fundraiser on Jan. 31. Held in the Cyclorama Building, the event attracted 20 restaurants and caterers, as well as five liquor sponsors, for a culinary competition. Capo Restaurant took home the award for best overall cocktail, and other winners included Lion's Tail for best presentation and Alibi Bar & Lounge for crowd favorite. The evening's 400 guests raised nearly $20,000 toward the center's programs.

→ The Muscular Dystrophy Association held its annual Boston Muscle Team gala on Feb. 8 at the Westin Boston Waterfront Hotel. Local athletes and three beauty pageant winners were paired with "buddies," children living with neuromuscular diseases. The evening's 400 guests enjoyed dinner and an auction that raised more than $300,000.

Q: DOES LASER HAIR REMOVAL REALLY WORK?

A: Absolutely; laser hair removal is extremely effective for the vast majority of people. It will not work on very blond or light hair, or on people with certain hormonal issues. After a full course of treatment, on average six sessions, if there is any regrowth, it is usually minimal and is very thin and fine in texture. Any area of the body can be treated, including the face, underarms, bikini area, legs, back, chest and shoulders.

Lasers use light energy to disable the hair follicle, which results in the follicle not being able to produce a new hair. The light from the laser is attracted to the dark root of your hair at the bottom of the follicle. The heat from the laser light bonds the sides of the hair follicle together; no more hair growth!

Our clients love the freedom from shaving or waxing, and the increased confidence that comes from knowing their skin is always smooth and hair-free.

THE PANTHER KING

MARVEL'S CIRCLE OF LIFE CONTINUES WITH RYAN COOGLER'S CROWD-PLEASER

It's been nearly a decade since the Marvel Cinematic Universe began taking shape with the release of Iron Man. Before then, the idea of an interconnected series of superhero films spun out of the pages of comic books was something that appealed almost exclusively to middle-aged man-children who never quite outgrew those adventures.

It seems quaint to think of this now, since Disney's Marvel Studios has successfully launched 17 movies in the top box office slot. A big part of sustaining—and expanding—the appeal of these serialized action adventures was the decision by Marvel Studios' president, Boston-born Kevin Feige, to set each film within a different genre. That approach was best exemplified by the three Captain America pictures: The First Avenger, a star-spangled, patriotic paean to the Greatest Generation's battle against fascism; The Winter Soldier, a contemporary action movie deeply indebted to the paranoid thrillers of the 1970s; and Civil War, the story of a fractured family torn apart in an ideological battle of brother against brother.

Civil War was also notable for introducing T'Challa, prince of the fictional African nation of Wakanda and the man behind the mask of the Black Panther, a comic character created by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby that debuted in July of 1966, predating the founding of the Black Panther Party by a few months.

Now, in Marvel's 18th film, T'Challa (Chadwick Boseman) finally graces his own long-awaited solo adventure—only this time, the picture doesn't just adapt itself to one genre, but a handful of them. Quite fittingly for a Disney release set primarily in Africa, Black Panther borrows from one of the studio's biggest animated hits, The Lion King, as the Wakandan prince ascends to the throne of his late father who died in a terrorist bombing during the events of Civil War. Utilizing not only some of the spiritual aspects of the 1994 Oscar winner but some of its more overt Shakespearean aspirations as well, director and co-writer Ryan Coogler (along with Joe Robert Cole) also manages to weave in elements of monomyth, culled from Star Wars and The Lord of the Rings.

Despite this, Coogler's staging of the action sequences is somewhat disappointing, given the fresh energy he brought back to boxing in Creed.

But the films for which Coogler—the 31-year-old wunderkind behind Fruitvale Station and knockout Rocky reboot, Creed—clearly displays the most reverence are those featuring suave super-spy James Bond. He pays homage to that franchise not only with T'Challa's teenage sister Shuri (Letitia Wright)—a smart-mouthed tech genius whose gadgets exceed those dreamed up by Bond pal Q—but also with the mission that T'Challa embarks upon at an underground casino in Busan, South Korea.

Flanked by the proudly bald-pated Okoye (Danai Gurira)—head of the all-female Wakandan special forces—and "War Dog" Nakia (Lupita Nyong'o, Oscar winner for 12 Years a Slave)—a Wakandan spy and one-time love of T'Challa—the newly crowned king intends to apprehend one-armed South African arms dealer Ulysses Klaue. Pioneering performance capture artist Andy Serkis (the man behind Caesar in the recent Planet of the Apes trilogy) portrays Klaue, a fugitive who murdered the parents of W'Kabi (Daniel Kaluuya of Get Out), chief of Wakandan security and T'Challa's royal counsel.

The trio quickly realize that Klaue is about to sell stolen Vibranium (Wakanda's most precious resource and the secret element behind most of the advanced technologies they've hidden from the world for generations) to C.I.A. operative Everett K. Ross (Martin Freeman), which leads to one of Coogler's now-customary single-take fight sequences as Cambridge-born director of photography Rachel Morrison (current Oscar nominee for Mudbound) sends her agile camera careening from one floor to the next and back.

Despite this, Coogler's staging of the action sequences is somewhat disappointing, given the fresh energy he brought back to boxing in Creed. Notably, a subsequent car chase through the streets of Busan fails to measure up to a highway shootout in The Winter Soldier, and a handful of the visual effects look like they were rendered more than a decade ago. If the movie was driven purely by computer-generated imaging, this would be a problem. However, like Coogler's previous pictures, Black Panther has more to offer than the violence that disrupts its characters' lives, punctuated by performances that greatly elevate the material.

Boseman—best known for playing historical figures like Jackie Robinson, James Brown and Thurgood Marshall in a string of biopics—brings a stoic dignity that stands in sharp contrast to the swagger of this film's main antagonist, Erik "Killmonger" Stevens. As played by Fruitvale Station and Creed star Michael B. Jordan (Robert De Niro to Coogler's Martin Scorsese), he's a self-professed "kid from Oakland running around believing in fairy tales," and the first Marvel villain whose motivation might be justified. For a film that's been hailed as a defining moment for both cinema and black America, this is perhaps its greatest surprise of all. ◆

SPICE OF LIFE

SOUTHERN FUSION VIRTUOSOS REUNITE WITH ORIGINAL '70S LINEUP

THE DIXIE DREGS
play the Wilbur Theatre on March 19.

Steve Morse knows how to revive a renowned rock entity. The virtuoso guitarist took a turn in the group Kansas in the late '80s, then joined British hard-rock icons Deep Purple in 1994. He's held that position since, performing at the band's 2016 Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction and on its still-continuing Last Goodbye Tour.

However, Morse's personal claim-to-fame remains the Dixie Dregs, the eclectic instrumental outfit he co-founded in the early '70s. Fusing rock, jazz, bluegrass and classical elements, the Grammy-nominated group sealed a cult following after its 1983 breakup, with subsequent reunions of revolving alumni in addition to Morse, drummer Rod Morgenstein and keyboardist T Lavitz.

Lavitz's death in 2010 cast doubt on any future outings. But when the Dixie Dregs hit New Hampshire's Tupelo Music Hall on March 18 and the Wilbur Theatre the next night, it'll be part of the first tour in 40 years to feature the group's original lineup, rounded out by keyboardist Steve Davidowski, violinist Allen Sloan and co-founding bassist Andy West.

"It is like riding a bicycle," Morse, 63, says. "Everybody's personality is the same. Everybody plays with the same tendencies."

In the intervening years, West kept his chops up, recording with top musicians Mike Keneally and Henry Kaiser while working in the software industry. Sloan remains a practicing anesthesiologist, having made only the occasional Dregs reunion. Morse briefly flew as a commercial co-pilot in addition to duties with the Steve Morse Band and other gigs, while Morgenstein joined the hard-rock band Winger and became a percussion professor at Berklee. They found Davidowski had also remained active in music, playing with bands in North Carolina.

"Before we even talked about doing this, we said, 'Let's just get together and play some tunes and have a private reunion'—and we did that and it went very well," Morse says. "We've been down the interstates a lot, but there's nothing like the recharge of energy you get from playing with people and music you like and especially audiences that like the music. That changes it."

Indeed, diehard fans fueled the revival, voting for songs to include on this Dawn of the Dregs tour in a poll on the band's website. Historically, Dregs shows have sported fan favorites that span the band's broad range, from the cowbell-pushed riffing of "Take It Off the Top" to the accelerating bluegrass-twangy trade-offs of "The Bash" and the impressionistic string flights of "Odyssey," which evoked the influence of the Mahavishnu Orchestra. But this tour's also expected to include 1977's Free Fall (the only album with Davidowski), plus two tunes never previously played live: the melancholy "Day 444" and classically sculpted "Go for Baroque."

"It is like riding a bicycle. Everybody's personality is the same. Everybody plays with the same tendencies."

Morse studied classical composition at the University of Miami at the same time that Pat Metheny, Jaco Pastorius and Bruce Hornsby were in that music program. Morse played classical guitar originals in the first half of his senior recital, then showcased the budding Dregs. "It was just lax enough in terms of expression," he says of the school. "I happened to not fit in any place I went. I was too rock for the jazz guys and I was too much of a beginner for the classical guys."

He earned some credibility with the jazz crowd when the Dregs began to cover Mahavishnu after that fusion juggernaut performed on campus, with Morse right up front. "People acknowledge the greatness of the classical composers but don't listen much, and part of that is [classical music] doesn't appeal to the ears as much as the insistent rhythm of rock," Morse says of his genre-mixing philosophy. "Keep it energetic yet have variety. Keep the songs fairly short and have lots of changes. ... Challenge the audience a little bit, but keep bringing them back."

It makes for a balance of technical mastery and crowd-pleasing friskiness. "There's no taking it too seriously," Morse says—and that attitude extends to the name West hatched when their old high school band Dixie Grit broke up. "We were the only ones left, so Andy said, 'I guess we're Dixie Dregs now.' I laughed, and that was it." ◆

THE PHONE CHASE

AN INCREDIBLY DUMB PURSUIT OF A SMARTPHONE

MY BELIEF SET IS FLEXIBLE. In general, I'm willing to change course when presented with compelling new information. But I have one credo that I live by no matter what: Don't get the product insurance. Insurance is for houses, cars and your life, not for the nose-hair trimmer you just got at Best Buy. When I'm offered the product insurance or an extended warranty, I steel my gaze and curtly reply, "I'll take my chances." I've no doubt that many a cashier has gone home at night and recounted to friends and family the tale of the amazing badass who showed up that day at Bed Bath & Beyond.

So, let me tell you about my new iPhone 8 Plus. I decided it was time to upgrade, and I marched into my local Verizon store and sat down with a sales guy named Walter. Whenever I go in there, I try to deal with Walter because Walter is awesome. He'll say things like, "I sailed around the Bahamas on a 44-foot Hatteras for a while after I broke up with my ex-wife... well, second ex-wife." When I tell Walter I'm not getting the insurance, I'm kind of proud. Like, hey Walter, fellow rapscallion here, obviously.

My old phone had an exceedingly ugly black-and-white case that was covered in rubber ribs. It looked like a starving zebra with a skin condition but it was so grippy you never dropped it—it was a battle to even get it out of your pocket. I would've been happy to get the same one for my new $800 superphone, but I couldn't find anything like it. I ended up with a case that's sleek and attractive, but kind of slippery. So, no insurance. Slippery new phone. Students of foreshadowing may note that this is some of that.

Our narrative now jumps to the Miami airport, where a car is dropping me off at the American Airlines terminal. It will then disgorge two other passengers at the Delta terminal, about a half-mile away. I get out, grab my bags and bid farewell. As the car is pulling away, I do my compulsory pocket check: Wallet is there. Phone... oh, no. Where's my phone? My slippery-ass phone must've fallen out of my pocket. In the car. Which is still only about 100 feet away, waiting to pull into traffic. I sprint after it, flailing my arms and yelling, in the hopes that someone will glance in a rearview mirror, but nobody does. The car pulls away.

I do the sensible thing and go inside to the information desk, where I use their phone to call the people who'd dispatched the car, who then inform the driver to circle back with my phone. Just kidding. I start running. In traffic. While towing my bags.

And this isn't your normal everyday airport running, the concerned half-jog that allows a person to retain some shred of dignity. No, this is the Hot Mess 5K, and I'm the only entrant. Earlier that day, I'd walked several miles in Sperry Top-Siders, sans socks, shredding the skin on my right Achilles tendon. No problem, though. I figured I'd put on socks and Nikes at the airport, but in the meantime I just squished down the back of the Sperry and wore it like a slipper. Which works OK when you're walking, but is less than ideal for a sprint.

Because the Miami terminal road is shaped like a horseshoe, the shortest distance around is the far left lane. That's where I am, huffing along with my shabby slipper-shoe flopping about as drivers honk and yell at me. Someone is probably calling the cops on the wild-eyed demented man running in traffic. I don't care. Things can't get any worse than they already are. But then, of course, they do. My shoe falls off.

I stop only long enough to pick it up. By now the road's straightened out, so I cut back onto the sidewalk and continue my hell-sprint unencumbered by any remaining dignity. I'm faster without the bum shoe, my one bare foot slapping the sidewalk at a torrid pace. Fellow travelers stop to stare at famed sprinter Insane Dolt, closing in on a new world record in the uni-shoe 1,000-meter life-fail. But you know what? I catch the car at the Delta terminal. I get my phone. Then I nearly collapse and die because I've just sprinted a half-mile semi-barefoot while towing 35 pounds of luggage. Later, I will have the pleasure of completely changing my sweat-drenched clothes within the confines of an airport bathroom stall, which is equipped with an automatic toilet that just keeps flushing.

The upside here is that I confirmed two valuable life rules: First, always refuse the phone insurance because if you leave your phone in a car you can just chase it down like the bad Terminator. Second, and this is important: Always wear socks to the airport. ◆

So, no insurance. Slippery new phone. Students of foreshadowing may note that this is some of that.

Soroff On / Meghann Fahy

FAVORING THE BOLD

THE UP-AND-COMING ACTRESS CHATS ABOUT SOAP OPERAS, THE THRILL OF THEATER AND CHIPPING A TOOTH

BORN AND RAISED IN LONGMEADOW, ACTRESS Meghann Fahy, 27, stars in the popular Freeform series The Bold Type, about a group of young women working at a fashion magazine based on Cosmopolitan. The show's second season premieres later this spring. Fahy began her career on Broadway in 2010 in the Tony- and Pulitzer Prize-winning musical Next to Normal. Her first TV role was on the soap opera One Life to Live, and she has had recurring roles on The Jim Gaffigan Show, The Good Wife, Necessary Roughness, Political Animals, Chicago Fire, Gossip Girl and Blue Bloods. In film, she has had supporting roles in Miss Sloane, opposite Jessica Chastain, as well as the independent features Burning Bodhi, Those People and License Plates. She lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Growing up, were you a Broadway baby?

MEGHANN FAHY: I wasn't. I think I saw my first Broadway show when I was 16. I didn't grow up in an environment where I was listening to Broadway cast albums, but I remember that when I was a senior in high school, my best friend took me as my graduation present to see Spring Awakening, and that was the first musical I had ever seen that totally made me obsessed. I loved the music. Up to that point, I hadn't really experienced what they call pop-rock musicals. That was the first exposure I had to that kind of singing, and I felt like it was accessible, and obviously it spoke to my generation in such an important way. So after that, I was like, "Wow! Theater can be so many things. I had no idea." That was kind of when I really started to fall in love with musical theater.

Which is harder: Broadway or doing a soap opera? They're both actually really hard, but I would say that doing a musical on Broadway is the hardest thing I've ever done in my life. Work-wise, it's the most challenging. It's draining. There's so much you can't do, like having dairy, because it's not great for your voice. And you can't go out to loud bars, because you have to rest. You can't get sick or else you'll have to skip a show. So there's so much care and attention that needs to be taken when you're performing that much, and it's so taxing, both physically and emotionally. It's also the most rewarding experience I've ever had professionally.

What about doing a soap? The most challenging thing is memorizing a huge amount of dialogue. Soap operas are such machines. They move so quickly. You kinda have to jump on the train, and if you can't, it leaves without you. The amount of dialogue you have to learn on a day-to-day basis is pretty spectacular. But there are tricks for it. Now, when I read lines with my boyfriend for something he's doing, I memorize his lines before he does, and that's because of my time spent on One Life to Live. It honed my memorization skills so well.

Worst audition nightmare? I have so many. I one time chipped my tooth before an audition, and I had to super glue it back into my mouth with no mirror, in the bathroom of a McDonald's near Penn Station. I think that's my most intense pre-audition story. I still had to show up and sing. I don't think I ever told anybody but my mom and my best friend that story, because it was so mortifying, but looking back on it now, it's kind of incredible.

"I one time chipped my tooth before an audition, and I had to super glue it back into my mouth with no mirror."

Which of the TV shows that you've done was the most fun on set? Believe it or not, Law & Order: SVU. It was something I'd always wanted to do, because I love that show so much, but what I thought was so special about that set was that they're constantly dealing with heavy, heavy subject matter, and yet they're able to create a really warm, friendly, upbeat, happy atmosphere in spite of that. I think that's pretty amazing.

Biggest difference between doing theater and TV or film? When you're doing theater, the audience is always letting you know where you stand with them. They inform your performance so much, and it morphs as a result of their reaction to what's happening on stage. That's so exhilarating, but it's for better or worse, because if it's not going well, you know it. If it is, there's a palpable energy and everybody gets fired up and it's awesome. There's nothing like that instant gratification and experiencing something in real time. With TV or film, you have no way to gauge how they feel about what you're doing.

TV show you're currently binge-watching? Well, I just finished watching Riverdale, and I just finished watching Mind Hunter, which totally blew my mind. It was kind of a slow burn for me at the beginning, but the payoff is so good.

Song you find yourself singing in the shower most often? There's a new Paramore album called After Laughter, which came out last season while we were shooting the show, and it kind of summarized my whole experience of that. They're one of my favorite bands anyway, so I sing a lot of Paramore in the shower.

Actor or director you're dying to work with? So many, but I would love to work with Julianne Moore. I think she's so incredible. And I'd really love to work with Cary Fukunaga. I met him once, and he seemed like such a lovely man who I think is so talented.

Any ways in which you're like the characters you've played? I have played several really crazy bad girls. I'm not sure why, but it's so fun and I love it. But I'm not anything like the girl I played on the soap opera. It was fun to be so insane and kidnap people's children.

You kinda skipped the whole struggling actor phase. Why do you think it came so easily? Well, not entirely. I did get really lucky when I got Next to Normal, and that was an incredible experience, but after that, I definitely had a lot of time when I was nannying or hosting at a restaurant just to get by and pay my rent. So I do recognize that I've had a lot of incredible opportunities at a young age, but having a time, in between, when you're picking up kids from school and bussing tables and stuff is incredible experience to have, because it makes every single success feel earned. There's an appreciation that you get from those times.

Is acting a way to disappear? For me? No. Personally, I'm not the kind of actor who disappears into a character and becomes a different person. The way that I work is that I look at a scene and think, "How would I do this if I were this person in this position?" Finding that feels like telling the truth, and that's what enables me to do it, because I hate feeling like I'm being false. So if anything, I not only don't disappear, I examine myself more closely and ask why I am the way I am. ◆

Elizabeth Flock, 31, lives in Washington, D.C., where she works as a reporter for PBS NewsHour. A Chicago native, Flock previously worked at The Boston Phoenix. Her nonfiction book The Heart Is a Shifting Sea: Love and Marriage in Mumbai chronicles three Indian couples that Flock encountered while living in Mumbai after graduating from Boston College.

On how she got the idea for the book: About 10 years ago, after I graduated college, I moved to Mumbai and got a job as a reporter at Forbes India magazine and worked there for two years. That's when I met these couples. Due to a combination of being sort of homesick and restless and broke, I ended up living with a number of different Indian families. I was also coming off the heels of dealing with my dad's third divorce and thinking a lot about why marriages work or fail. Living with these different couples, I got interested in Indian marriage, and I thought maybe I could learn some lessons from these people. I informally started asking them questions about their marriages. I thought maybe I would write a novel. But then I kept in touch with them, kept asking questions, and I returned full-time to the project in 2014. I then went on two long reporting trips and lived with the couples again, doing sit-down formal interviews for hundreds of hours. I lived with them, traveled with them, went to work with them. [The book is] about love in India right now and how the institution of marriage is being affected by a tremendous amount of social and cultural change. But mostly, it's really about these three couples I got to know and their stories, which were really compelling to me.

On how writing the book changed her views on marriage: In the West, we think of arranged marriages as absolutely horrific. We look at it with some mix of skepticism and horror. I really feel like I learned some lessons from arranged marriages. Obviously, there are some really bad arranged marriages. But there are some really good ones, too. In the U.S., I think people have tremendously high expectations of partners in marriages that happen out of love. I think I learned a bit about maybe not doing that as much and maybe taking that person more where they're at, which is something you sort of have to do with an arranged marriage.

> IN THE U.S., I THINK PEOPLE HAVE TREMENDOUSLY HIGH EXPECTATIONS OF PARTNERS IN MARRIAGES THAT HAPPEN OUT OF LOVE. I THINK I LEARNED A BIT ABOUT MAYBE NOT DOING THAT AS MUCH AND MAYBE TAKING THAT PERSON MORE WHERE THEY'RE AT.

On whether she had a strict writing routine: I didn't have a good structured routine. A lot of it I wrote in Mumbai. But I also went to NYU and did a graduate program there, and I spent time at the Writer's Room in Washington, D.C. It's a bunch of writers who all work in this ramshackle place.

On how the couples featured in the book reacted to it: They read it and had different reactions. One of them said to me that when he first read it, he was upset because it's so hard to read about yourself on the page. But we talk all the time, and have for years and years. I'm really close with them.

Richard Lawson, 34, lives in New York where he works as the film critic for Vanity Fair. Lawson grew up in Boston, and his newly published young adult novel All We Can Do Is Wait is based in Boston.

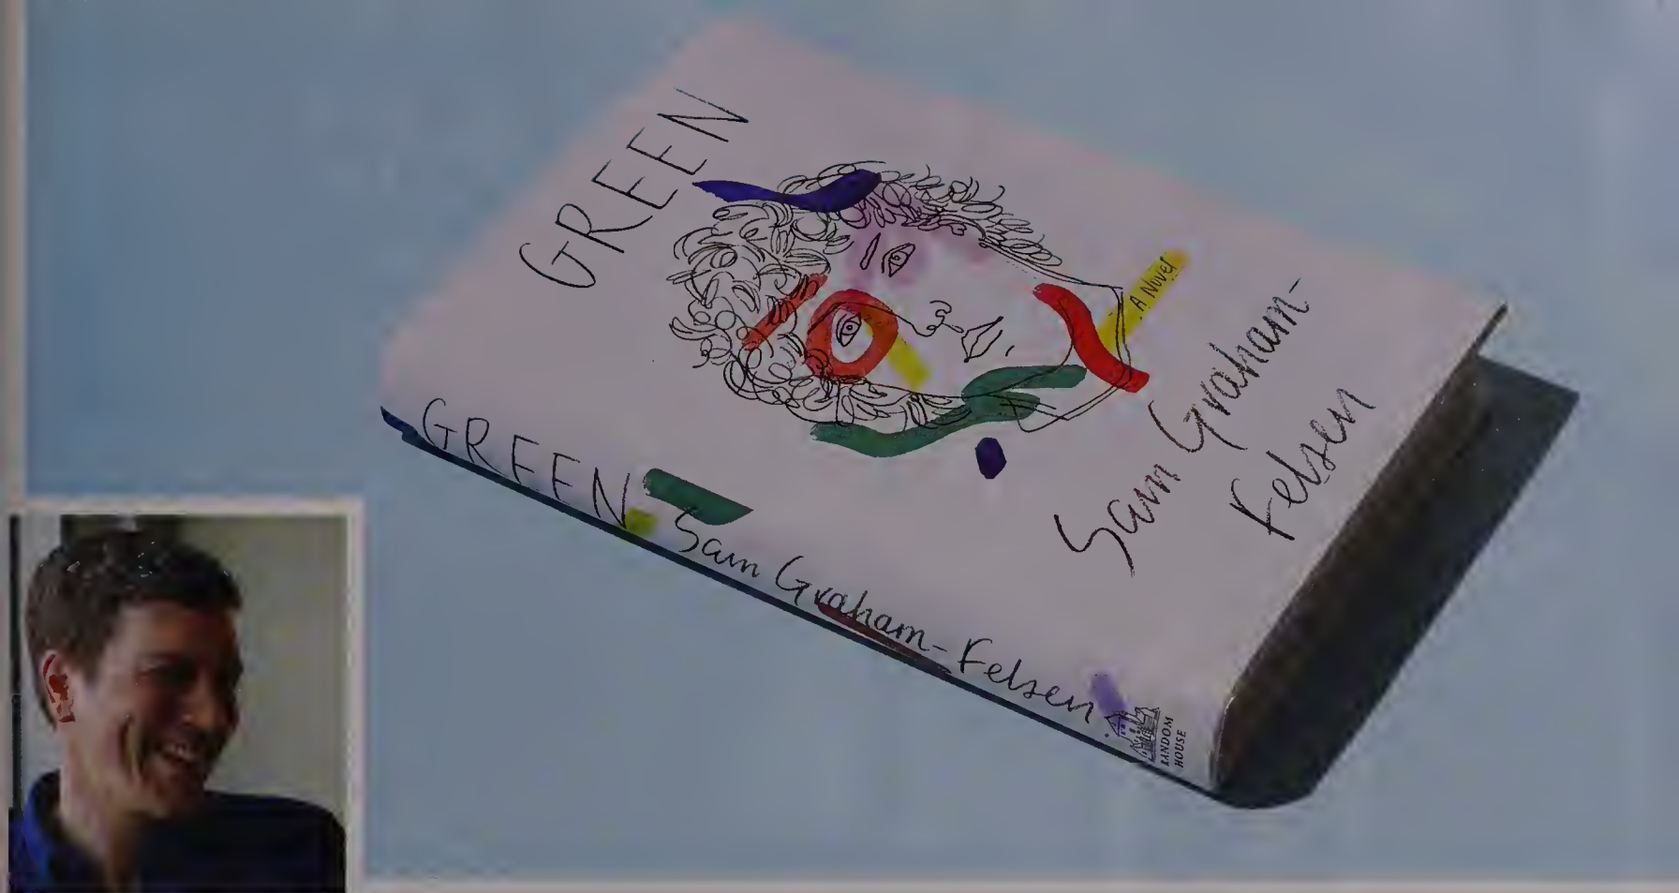
On how he got the idea for the book: I had this idea about [writing a book about] kids in a hospital following a disaster. [It] just kind of sprang into being. I thought maybe I could have it take place in Boston since that's where I'm from, and maybe we could have the Tobin Bridge collapse. It's Breakfast Club meets Grey's Anatomy. These five kids descend on a fake version of Mass. General to find out if their loved ones have survived this bridge collapse, but they're all dealing with some kind of personal trauma of a sort in their pasts. It's about them processing the bridge collapse and their past traumas.

MOST OF US HAVE SOME INTENSE FEELINGS ABOUT SOMETHING THAT HAPPENED TO US IN HIGH SCHOOL AND THOSE PRIMAL FEELINGS ARE STILL LINGERING HOWEVER MANY YEARS LATER.



On how he managed to fit in writing a book while working full-time at Vanity Fair: It was something I was pretty certain I couldn't do. [I thought] there's just no way I'll have the focus or the discipline, but I just somehow mustered it. I started writing it in January 2016. I turned a "dry January" into a "dry January, February, March, April." I did not do anything social. I spent my weekends writing the book. I would come home Friday night, have a quiet night, wake up early Saturday, write all day. I was trying to do a chapter a day—I don't know if I actually stuck to that—and then I would read back what I wrote that night and then kind of do that again on Sunday. I did that for about four months for the first draft. I pressed send on the email to my editor with the first draft attached and then left and got in a cab to head to Cannes for the film festival that same day. It was kind of a whirlwind. And then there were rewrites and revisions over the next, probably eight months.

On how hard it is to write about what you don't know, even when you're writing fiction: There was one character—probably not surprisingly a straight boy—that was the hardest to write. As a gay guy, I based all the girls in the book on people I've known in some way. There's a gay character who's somewhat based on me. But this straight boy—I was not really friends with any straight boys in high school. Trying to be sympathetic about that demographic—that was difficult. My first go at writing that character, it was too much of a critique of straight male culture. My editors were like, "He needs to be a little more sympathetic." I had to go back and change his whole plot to make him more sympathetic. I think I pulled it off.

On why he opted to write for a young adult audience: From having friends who have done YA, I knew that it is a very fertile genre right now. A lot is getting published in that sphere, so it was a good opportunity. We could make a deal and have a book planned without me having written anything, which for a literary fiction novel, for "grown-ups," I would have to go toil away for however long and then try to sell it. Most of us have some intense feelings about something that happened to us in high school and those primal feelings are still lingering however many years later. There's a lot there to tease out. So, as much as it was time-consuming to write it, a lot of the emotions came easily because they were so accessible from my own past.

Sam Graham-Felsen, 36, is a graduate of Boston Latin and Harvard University who now lives in Brooklyn. Graham-Felsen's novel Green is a coming-of-age story that he says in many ways resembles his own experiences growing up in Jamaica Plain.

On how Green is a young adult novel, but also a story about racial biases: It's about a white kid named Dave Greenfeld who is one of three white kids in his entire public middle school called the Martin Luther King School. It sort of starts out being about the alienation Dave feels being such an outsider and so different from his peers—the most obvious way being that he's white. It ends up being about a friendship that he develops with one of his classmates, a black kid named Marlon, who happens to live in Jamaica Plain down the block from Dave in the housing project. It's about their friendship and the way in which society puts all these social pressures on both of them that make interracial friendships really unnecessarily difficult. A lot of it is Dave's own set of unconscious biases. But more than that, it's about Dave just not being fully aware of how difficult it is for kids like Marlon—black kids in America—and the ways in which racism and structural barriers just make it really hard for Marlon to do the things that Dave can do pretty easily. The deeper narrative of the book involves Dave slowly waking up to how racism works.

On how he got the idea for the book: After college, I moved to New York with no plan. I worked as a waiter and got fired. I ended up landing an internship at The Nation and stayed on in a reporter/blogger role. I ended up writing about this young candidate people were excited about: Barack Obama. When the campaign officially launched, I ended up getting hired as Obama's blogger. It was during the Obama campaign that I began to think about writing something loosely based on my own experience. I knew it was a topic that would let me explore race in America, which is something I was thinking about a lot working on the campaign. But I had no idea how to write fiction. I never wanted to be a fiction writer. I ended up going to graduate school at Columbia and getting my MFA in fiction writing.

> IT WAS DURING THE OBAMA CAMPAIGN THAT I BEGAN TO THINK ABOUT WRITING SOMETHING LOOSELY BASED ON MY OWN EXPERIENCE.

On how much of the novel was influenced by his own experience growing up in Boston: I actually went to a public middle school called the Martin Luther King Middle School. There weren't many white kids in the Boston public schools back then. Even though the middle school in my book is a fictional version of the school I went to, I decided to keep the name for obvious reasons. It felt powerful and sad and tragic that there are actually a lot of urban public schools named after Martin Luther King, the great missionary of education, and those schools are generally incredibly segregated. One of the big narrative tensions in the book is that the two kids are trying out for Boston Latin. They're taking the Latin exam and they're incredibly stressed about whether or not they will get in. Dave's parents are sort of committed progressives from Jamaica Plain, and he's worried if he doesn't get into Latin they'll make him go to the local public school. For Marlon, the stakes are much higher because Latin is one of the few kind of steppingstones for a lot of kids who come from less privileged backgrounds. There aren't lots of great options beyond Latin, and Latin is literally one of the greatest public schools in the whole country. It sends more kids to Harvard than any other school in the country. So it feels like this make-or-break thing. If they get into Latin, their lives are going to be amazing. And if they don't, their lives could be terrible.

MOVIES

GAME NIGHT★★★ It's a bit odd to see a fairly elaborate comic riff on The Game more than two decades after the lesser David Fincher effort was released, but the reverence that directors John Francis Daley and Jonathan Goldstein (co-writers of last summer's Spider-Man: Homecoming) display for not just that 1997 picture, but also a few of Fincher's other pictures they reference (including Fight Club and Gone Girl) play better than anticipated. Nods to some of the auteur's more showy techniques, such as a single-shot game of keep-away, are rather artfully staged—more than you can say for anything in the duo's previous directing effort, 2015's uneven Vacation reboot. Jason Bateman and Rachel McAdams star as Max and Annie, a couple whose marriage seems to be based on their compatibility as trivia and charades partners. Lucky for us, it turns out that they're equally well matched as comic foils—although sexually, they seem to be having some problems. A fertility expert thinks Max might be shooting blanks due to lifelong competitiveness with his older, more handsome and successful brother, Brooks (Kyle Chandler), who's always beaten him at everything. So when Brooks invites them to take part in an elaborate murder mystery party along with two other couples, Max and Annie jump at the chance to beat him at his own game. And naturally, when Brooks is kidnapped by real gunmen, no one bats an eye. If Hitchcock for Dummies sounds like a fun alternative to your own game night, you could do worse than roll the dice on this comedy. EARLY MAN ★★★ British animator Nick Park, creator of Wallace & Gromit, makes a welcome return to directing after a 10-year absence with the surprising Early Man. The title does indeed refer to our cave-dwelling ancestors, and as you might have guessed, dinosaurs even make an appearance—just long enough to be wiped out by a meteor during the stop-motion animated movie's opening moments. But what's really shocking is where Park and his screenwriters go from here: After the prologue explains that the meteor responsible for the dino-pocalypse is about the same size as a soccer ball, the surviving cavemen naturally use it in their creation of a "sacred game" known everywhere but the U.S. as "football." (You might want to explain the world's football/soccer dichotomy to your kids before taking them.) Fast-forward to the Bronze Age, when a tribe of dim-witted rabbit-hunters is chased from the forests that sprang up within the meteor's crater by a more advanced civilization led by the Gallic-accented Lord Nooth (voiced by Tom Hiddleston). Unwilling to accept his tribe's banishment to the volcanic Badlands, a young dreamer named Dug (Eddie Redmayne) challenges Nooth's best football team to a match against the cavemen, with the winners poised to receive permanent land rights. And while Park doesn't hit the goal as flawlessly as in the past, Early Man is nearly as charming and punny as you'd expect from the director of Chicken Run. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

A FANTASTIC WOMAN ★★★★ Chilean director Sebastián Lelio has an amazing way with actresses. His last film, Gloria, was punctuated by a glorious performance by Paulina García in the titular role, and she earned the Best Actress award at the Berlin International Film Festival for her efforts. Now, Lelio is back with a worthy follow-up, built around another intimate and empowering exploration of a woman finding herself. Only this time, that woman faces many more societal hurdles. Rather than overlooked for being middle-aged, the 20-something Marina Vidal is shunned for being a transgendered woman, a situation that's exacerbated when Orlando (Francisco Reyes), the waitress and talented singer's decades-older boyfriend, unexpectedly dies. The two had just embarked on a new phase in their relationship, as she'd recently moved into his apartment, a living arrangement that sat badly with both his ex-wife (Aline Küppenheim) and his grown son (Nicolás Saavedra). By the time Marina is shown a bit of kindness from Orlando's brother (Luis Gnecco), she's experienced so much pain and derision not only from his callous family, but also the doctors and police who treat her with suspicion. It's only when she visits her paternal voice coach (Sergio Hernández) that she's able to let loose, igniting the soundtrack with Geminiano Giacomelli's "Sposa son Disprezzata," an aria about a scorned wife. It's enough to make you excuse Lelio's use of Aretha Franklin's "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman" elsewhere in this life-affirming little film. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

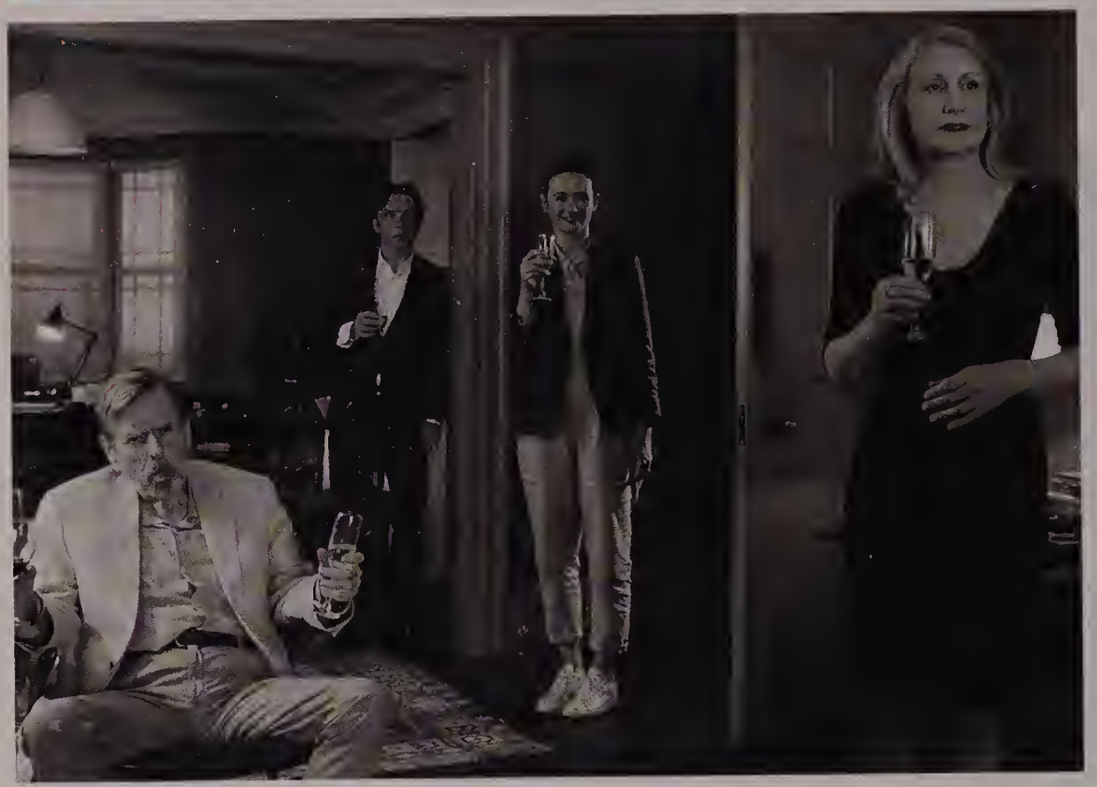
Happy End ★★★1/2 Austrian filmmaker Michael Haneke follows up his Oscar-winning Amour with this nihilistic provocation that functions as a semi-sequel to the unbearably heartbreaking love story from 2012. Jean-Louis Trintignant, an elderly veteran of the French New Wave, once again appears as an octogenarian named Georges, and he's trying to convince someone—anyone—to end his life that dementia has begun to dismantle. It's cruel, but the 75-year-old filmmaker has never been an artist known for his warmth, despite the tenderness he displayed in his previous film. Haneke's latest piece of playful misanthropy doesn't simply function as a quasi-continuation of Amour, but also as a summation of his three-decade career. The elliptical, fragmentary storytelling style recalls 2000's Code Unknown, while the backdrop of the European refugee crisis echoes the colonialism at the core of 2005's Caché. Meanwhile, the video voyeurism of 1992's Benny's Video has been updated for the smartphone and social media age. He also keeps his focus on society's moral rot, beginning with the youngest characters, a la the proto-Nazis in 2009's The White Ribbon. Featuring Haneke's frequent muse Isabelle Huppert as Georges' daughter Anne (who not-so-coincidentally portrayed a character with the same name in Haneke's apocalyptic drama Time of the Wolf), she's but one root in a poisoned family tree. You may be laughing too hard during the film's final moments to notice how complicit we've become with the characters' apathy toward others. But as is usual with Haneke, the joke's on us. (At Coolidge Corner.)



I, Tonya ★★ This smug satire was recently nominated for three Oscars, among them Margot Robbie's Best Actress nod for her fierce turn as Tonya Harding and Allison Janney's one-note, yet enjoyable supporting role as the disgraced Olympian's harridan mother. While I, Tonya wants desperately to be the Goodfellas of figure skating movies, director Craig Gillespie (Lars and the Real Girl) is less Martin Scorsese and more American Hustle's David O. Russell—which is to say that it feels like a copy of a copy, since Gillespie lacks the tonal or character control of either. But boy, does he like deploying classic rock needle-drops. Based on what the film calls wildly contradictory interviews with the real Harding and her ex-husband Jeff Gillooly, the script by Steven Rogers (writer of romantic schmaltz like Hope Floats, Kate & Leopold and P.S. I Love You) presents the tabloid tale that led to Nancy Kerrigan's kneecapping as a mockumentary of sorts, with most of the major players (including Sebastian Stan as Gillooly and Paul Walter Hauser as Harding's bodyguard, Shawn Eckhardt) donning bad makeup and even worse wigs to comment on the events surrounding the 1994 scandal from a more recent perspective. As these unreliable narrators break the fourth wall for comedic punctuation, we watch Tonya as she grows from a child prodigy into the trash-talking smoker who'd be a total embarrassment if she weren't so talented. Critical of the sensationalism that the Kerrigan assault spawned, the movie's equally guilty of classist navel-gazing. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square, Seaport and in the suburbs.)

The Insult ★★★ Similar to what he did in his last film, The Attack, a drama involving a Palestinian man investigating his wife's death in a suicide bombing, Lebanese director Ziad Doueiri once again looks at complex events through the lens of modern Arab identity. Set in contemporary Beirut and focusing on two men, The Insult is set in motion over a protruding drainpipe that's not up to code. Yasser Salameh (Kamel El Basha)—a Palestinian refugee and construction foreman tasked with fixing building violations in an insular community—is accidentally soaked as Christian resident and mechanic Tony Hanna (Adel Karam) waters the plants on his balcony. When Tony brushes off Yasser's offer to fix the pipe, Yasser begins the repair anyway, a move that causes Tony to lash out and destroy the handyman's work. Flustered, Yasser responds with, well, gutter language. Things go downhill after Yasser refuses to apologize when his boss tries to broker peace between them, until the hotheaded Tony spews a racially charged insult that prompts a physical response. A couple of broken ribs and two court cases later, the country is a powder keg, with tensions between Muslims and Christians about to explode. As an allegory, this Oscar nominee for the Best Foreign Language Film is more contrived than credible, but the two actors are so strong that you'll likely overlook its more heavy-handed flaws. (At Kendall Square.)

Nostalgia ★★1/2 Not the subtlest of dramas, this new weepie from Mark Pellington (director of Arlington Road) boasts one hell of a cast. Start with John Ortiz as Daniel, an insurance appraiser who visits the apartment of recent widower Ronnie (Oscar nominee Bruce Dern), a hoarder with no interest in purging the items his memories are intrinsically tied up in, to the chagrin of his granddaughter Bethany (Amber Tamblyn). From there, Daniel travels to the burned-out shell of a home belonging to Helen (Oscar winner Ellen Burstyn), a widow who while fleeing the blaze wasn't able to grab more than a box of jewelry and the signed baseball that her late husband had long revered. Her married son Henry (Nick Offerman) offers to put her up, while encouraging her to start fresh at a retirement community. Attached to the ball solely because of how much it meant to the only man she ever loved, she does something their son never thought she would: travel to Las Vegas to get an appraisal from Will (Jon Hamm), a serious collector of sports memorabilia. It's at this point that the film—which features a verbose script by indie darling Alex Ross Perry (writer/director of Listen Up Philip)—begins to really click, partially because of the delightful chemistry between Burstyn and Hamm, and also due to the believable dynamic between Hamm and former Oscar nominee Catherine Keener, who plays Will's sister Donna in the heartrending scenes that close out the film. If you can get past the treacly music score, you might just find an honest look at the past, filtered through the present. (At Boston Common.)

The Party ★★★ Sally Potter's new pitch-black comedy will no doubt remind you of 1966's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, what with its shadowy black-and-white cinematography and an unforgettably dyspeptic look at disintegrating relationships. But it will help to approach the 68-year-old, British writer/

director's latest armed with the knowledge that it's not quite the masterpiece to match Mike Nichols' adaptation of Edward Albee's play. But then, at 71 mercifully fleet minutes, you might not mind. As couples begin to gather at the home of Janet (Kristin Scott Thomas) and Bill (Timothy Spall) to celebrate Janet's political ascension within the British government, her distracted husband has his own announcement to make. Ah, but not before Martha (Cherry Jones) and her longtime partner Jinny (Emily Mortimer) have their own dramatic news to share. In fact, drama will become the theme of the evening, especially once Janet's acid-tongued best friend April (Patricia Clarkson) arrives, willing to cut down anyone or anything—particularly her aromatherapist boyfriend, Gottfried (Bruno Ganz), from whom she repeatedly announces her separation, in case anyone missed it the third or fourth time. The only person to arrive solo is Tom, one half of a popular power couple, who seems to need the alone time, given the frequency with which he visits the bathroom to snort coke. And did I mention the gun that appears in the opening scene? I'll leave it to you to discover if Chekhov's old rule applies in the buildup to the movie's delicious final shot. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Peter Rabbit ★★ Pity poor Peter Rabbit. As disposable kiddie fare, it wouldn't be half bad if not for the recent release of the exceptional Paddington 2. But then, Paddington director Paul King's Babe-level fable fundamentally understands what made Michael Bond's children's books work, while Will Gluck (director of 2014's misbegotten version of Annie) and co-screenwriter Rob Lieber would appear to never have cracked open any of Beatrix Potter's enjoyable texts. Less of an adaptation than a standalone story, Gluck's live action/photo-real animation hybrid takes place some time after The Tale of Peter Rabbit and The Tale of Benjamin Bunny. Peter's parents have both departed for lagomorph heaven, while his adventures into the garden of Mr. McGregor (Sam Neill) have become routine. And when Peter's nemesis also goes belly-up, the film treats McGregor's death as a laugh. In other words, don't expect much empathy from Peter. Voiced by The Late Late Show's James Corden, Peter is one of the least likable characters to hit screens since Alvin in the recent spate of Chipmunks movies. Unfortunately, on the likability scale, Peter gets competition from Mr. McGregor's nephew, Thomas (Star Wars: The Last Jedi's Domhnall Gleeson), who inherits the old man's estate. If it weren't for the calming presence of Rose Byrne as rabbit-friendly neighbor Bea (along with Margot Robbie as the voice of Flopsy, Elizabeth Debicki as Mopsy, Daisy Ridley as Cotton-Tail and Colin Moody as Benjamin Bunny), spending time with these battling jerks would be even more torturous. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Winchester ★ Has a gun manufacturer ever been haunted by guilt about gun violence? Today, that's a loaded question, but how about in 1906? This latest bit of nonsense from German twins Peter and Michael Spierig (directors of last year's horror misfire, Jigsaw) attempts to provide an answer by positing literal hauntings at the center of this tale that's been billed as "inspired by true events." Truth, as it turns out, must have been just as elusive a century ago as it is in the age of Trump. I sincerely hope Academy Award-winner Helen Mirren was at least paid well for attempting to class up this claptrap in her role as Sarah Winchester, heiress to the Winchester fortune. Moving to an isolated stretch of land in San Jose, California, in 1886, the black-clad widow purchased an eight-room farmhouse and then—according to the Spierigs and their co-writer Tom Vaughan—she proceeded to burn through her inheritance as she transformed the property into a seven-story manse containing hundreds of cavernous rooms, built by workers who toiled 24 hours a day, seven days a week for decades, seemingly without a blueprint. Was she crazy? That's what Dr. Eric Price (Jason Clarke) is hired by Winchester's board of directors to find out, for perhaps dubious reasons. But then, the good doctor's laudanum addiction might not make him the best judge—especially when he begins seeing the same apparitions that Lady Winchester is convinced are the ghosts of those killed by her family's products. As fiction, this isn't a terrible target. Too bad the Spierigs didn't have better aim. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

KEEP TALKING

Mat Kearney is long removed from when he shared the stage with the likes of John Mayer, Kelly Clarkson and Train. You might still recognize this Nashville troubadour's glossy vocals as the backdrop to iconic scenes in Grey's Anatomy and Parenthood or from Spotify's coveted playlist, Acoustic Chill. But now with a new label and 1-year-old daughter in haul, the fedora-donning artist is hitting the road to promote his sixth studio album, Crazytalk. Kearney is making waves with this fresh start and the tropical house-influenced style of his 2018 release, a dewy departure from his hip-hop-infused pop album of 2011. Catch breakout hit "Better Than I Used To Be" and other new Crazytalk tracks on March 12 at the House of Blues. / Hannah McKennett

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

PART TO PLAY Unleash your inner child at the Peabody Essex Museum's PlayTime. The nearly 40-work exhibit includes large-scale installations, sculptures, photographs, videos and more from 17 contemporary artists exploring the different ways in which the act of playing allows us to express ourselves. Pedro Reyes' working musical instruments had a previous life as 6,7000 guns confiscated by the Mexican government, while Lara Favaretto puts colorful car-wash brushes in motion. Then there's Work No. 329, thousands of pink balloons from Turner Prize-winning artist Martin Creed, that visitors can shimmy their way through. Make a play date at the PEM through May 6. / Julia Aparicio

We Salute Boston's Finest Restaurants and Clubs

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

JUST SAY NO...

Sorry, orange: It seems that red is the new black, judging by the outfits at the Red Party, an evening of fashion, music and technology to celebrate the restoration of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's Raphael Room.

Things started with cocktails and light bites in the new wing, where fashion designer Erin Robertson—in a daring head-to-mid-thigh vermilion ensemble—worked a loom, while her colleague Christian Restrepo showcased informal modeling of his designs. Performers included percussionist Billy Martin, electro-pop duo Breaking Forms, a ghostly player piano emitting classic ditties, and the Blue Heron Renaissance choir, whose ethereal and pitch-perfect singing filled the museum's courtyard with a sound that more than one guest described as angelic.

However, the evening's main attraction was the newly refurbished gallery and its restored red silk walls, which had guests "oohing" and "aahing" to beat the band. Present and accounted for: fashion plate Alli Achtmeyer and the dapper Bill, blond beauty Sarah Mars squired by incorrigible scamp Suhail Kwatra, good-ole boy Jackson McCard, gallery owner Olivia Ives-Flores with white-hot artists the Safarani twins, Baharch and Farzaneh, brunette beauty Christine McCormick, Cantabrigians Rebecca and Paul Nemser, toothsome photographer Alipio Hernandez, bespectacled hipster Tyler Shannon, musical pair Shea Rose and Simone Scazzocchio, Newtonian party animals Sue Bear and Mike Hill, Back Bay peacock Devin Hill with the stunning Kinesha Goldson, dashing crooner Michael Ricca, Pill Hillions Coco and Kyra Montagu, design avatar Marty Dykas, and one otherwise well-dressed gentleman who sheepishly confessed, "Don't tell anyone, but my pocket square is actually a sock."

When asked why she wasn't wearing red, one woman indignantly replied, "Rubies count," but the evening's best exchange came when someone tried to explain the familial relationship between two guests. "You'd have to do math to figure that one out," said another person, to which a third responded, "No. You'd have to do meth for that to make any sense."

FROM GERMANY, WITH LOVE...

What do the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Leipzig's Gewandhaus Orchestra have in common? If you guessed artistic director Andris Nelsons, give yourself three points. If you guessed the design of their 19th-century concert halls (Leipzig's was destroyed in World War II), give yourself a bonus.

To commemorate the historic alliance between the two organizations, the BSO hosted Leipzig Week in Boston, which opened with a reception at the Boston Public Library and continued with a concert that served as a kickoff party for the Emerald Necklace Conservancy's Party in the Park and included a world premiere by white-hot composer Sean Shepherd. As one attendee put it dryly, "This is the best fundraiser for a fundraiser I've ever been to."

The evening attracted the likes of mother-and-daughter team Molly and Dorothea Dunne, blond beauty Cackie Austin, the stunning Ursula Liff, newlyweds Lily and Brian Flatley and Caroline and Christian Clifford, the flawless Pam Messenger, Duxbury doyenne Holly Safford, PR operative Marlo Fogelman, and so on and so forth.

The festivities began with dinner and drinks in the Cabot-Cahners Room—a Boston table served clam or corn chowder with brown bread, while the Liepzig table offered brisket and asparagus—and continued with a magnificent concert. The evening's best remark: When Shepherd came onstage to take a bow, one attendee said, "He's so young!" To which his 89-year-old companion said, "To me, fossils look young."

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME...

The Park Plaza Castle was rented out by the Capulets for the evening, when Boston Ballet hosted Juliet's Ball, an extravaganza of epic proportions, to celebrate this season's production of Romeo and Juliet. The opulent affair began with a cocktail reception and continued with a five-course feast punctuated by performances and a live auction, followed by dessert and dancing into the wee hours.

Prominent among the gorgeously dressed throng: event chair Leslie Appleby, emcee Lisa Pierpont, pint-sized firecracker Lynn Dale and her other half, Frank Wisneski, stunning beauties Nina Fialkow and Audrey Reny, the unsinkable Brittany Greenfield, bright young things Alex and Lianne Leventhal, fashion plate Adele Chang and her dashing husband, Edward Yoon, South End socialites Nina and William Schroeder, and one person who muttered, "The only good auction is a quick auction."

Regarding the predominance of red ball gowns, one woman accepted a compliment on hers by saying, "Thanks. It matches my eyes," while another lamented, "I look like a haute-couture tablecloth."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the person who said, "I'm having a major hair malfunction, but I'm going to pretend it's intentional. Just let me know if any bobby pins end up in my cleavage." ◆

UMaine is pleased to offer the Flagship Match Program for out-of-state students entering in fall 2018. The Flagship Match Program is a competitive scholarship that guarantees academically qualified, first-year students from several states will pay the same tuition and fee rate as their home state's flagship institution. All other students entering fall 2018 will receive a significant and competitive grant that will help offset the cost of nonresident tuition and fees at UMaine.

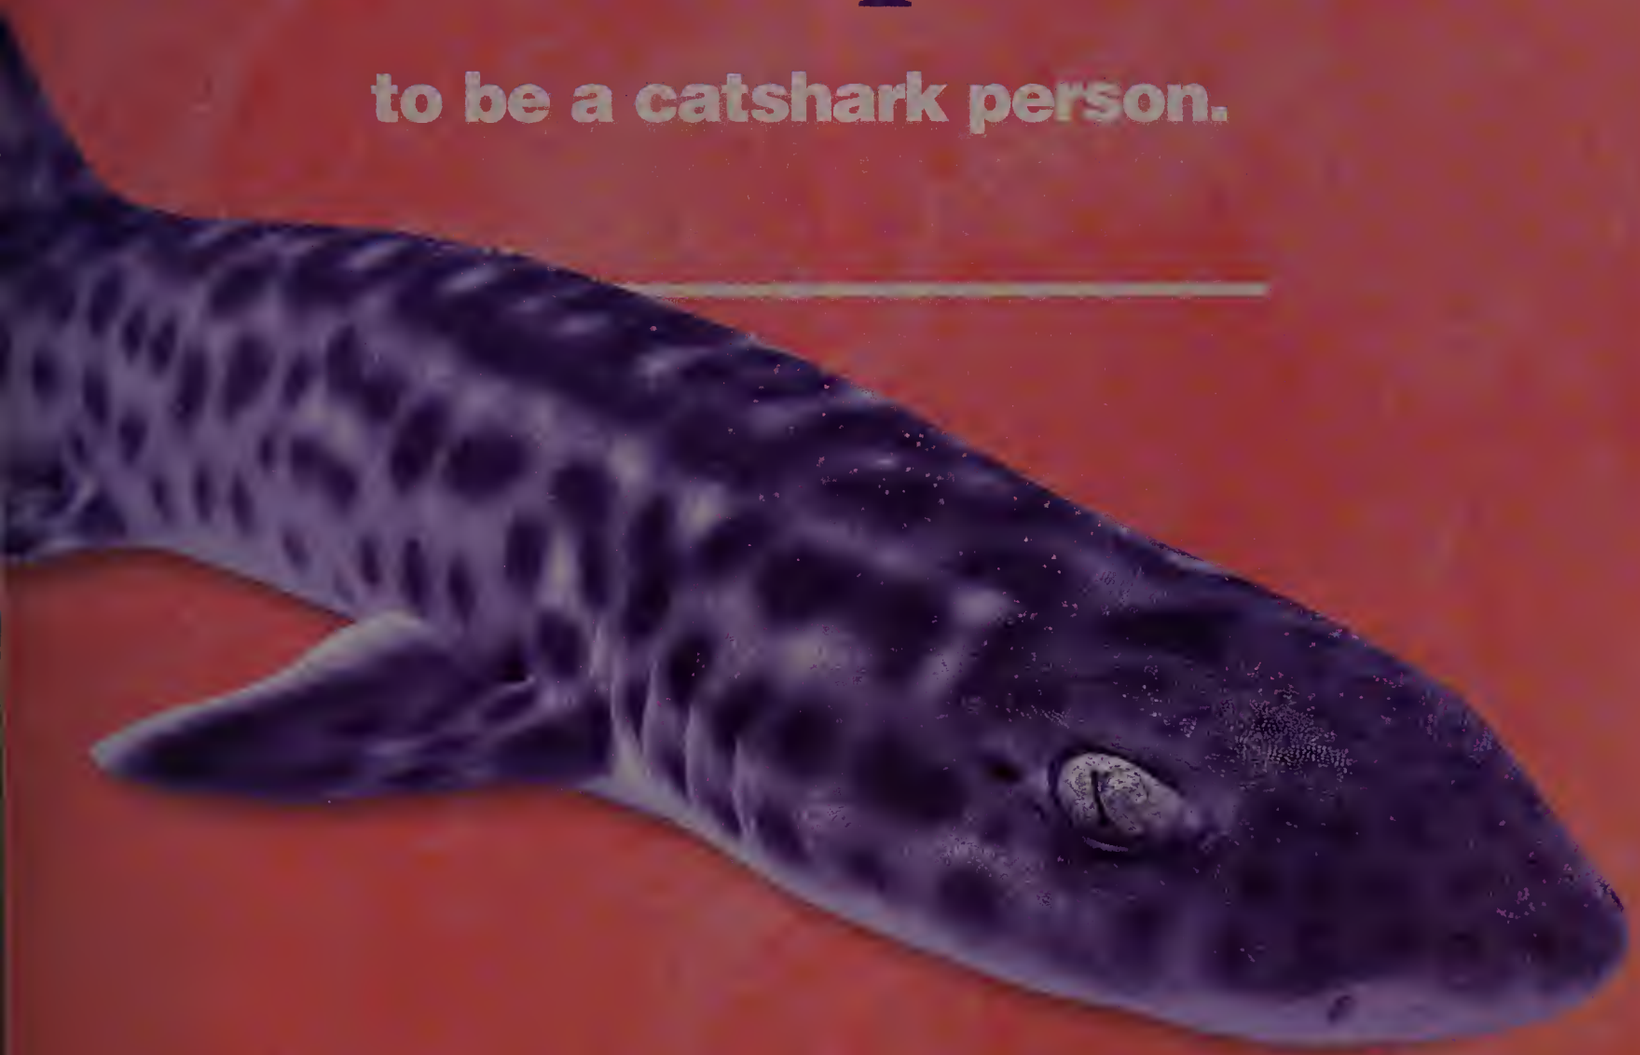
ART-FELT

THE ARTS SCENE HAS NEVER felt more important in my lifetime than it does right now. While arts can often offer a needed refuge from the harsh reality of life, they also can provide an eye-opening commentary on society. Our Spring Arts Preview showcases a mix of both sides. Sarah Hagman chats with the curator of Addison Gallery's Gun Country exhibit and among Nathan Tavares' must-see plays is The Women Who Mapped the Stars, a production from MIT and Nora Theatre Company that looks at five women who blazed a path in 19th-century astronomy. On the lighter side, Julia Aparicio chats with funnyman Craig Robinson, and I round up several concerts that will provide a great escape this season. Check out the 12-page preview, which offers picks for music, dance, theater, comedy, film fests, live podcasts and visual arts.

But don't skip past the previous pages. There's our cover subject, Bia, who knows a lot about harsh realities. She was onstage hours before last year's Manchester, England, bombing that killed 23 people at an Ariana Grande concert. The Medford native chats with Jonathan Soroff about her own musical journey. Elsewhere, Cathryn Haight interviews Harvard grad Uzodinma Iweala on his new book about a closeted teenage immigrant, and we also take a look at Jewish Arts Collaborative's upcoming public arts exhibit, Pathways to Freedom. That particular work will transform Bostonians' stories of immigration and the search for freedom into an eight-day installation at the Parkman Bandstand on the Boston Common, creating a nice counterpoint to the hateful alt-right rally held there last summer.



Despite the arts' importance, the president's proposed budget removes all funding for the National Endowment of the Arts, and the state's arts funding faces cuts nearly every year. If the arts are as important to you as they are to me, go visit some of the places we've highlighted in this issue and support them with your wallet. It's the easiest way for the rich-in-spirit arts scene to get rich in money.

Since 1782 the Teeling Family has been crafting Irish whiskey and it all began with Walter. In 1782 Walter Teeling set up a craft distillery on Marrowbone Lane in the Liberties area of Dublin commencing a 230 year tradition of distilling for the Teeling family. From Walter Teeling to the latest generation of Teelings in Jack and Stephen who are carrying on the family's legacy and forging a bright new future for distilling in Dublin and for Irish whiskey.

KICKIN' IT

THE REVS' JUAN AGUDELO GEARS UP FOR THE NEW SEASON

On Solid Footing

Count Juan Agudelo as one of the few New England residents who is dreading June. That's because the New England Revolution striker and U.S. men's national team player knows the World Cup buzz will be unavoidable. Alas, the red-white-and-blue won't taking the field in Russia. They'll be watching from home, as the U.S. failed to qualify for the 32-team tournament for the first time since 1986.

"It's an awful feeling. Every time it's brought up, it brings up emptiness. The World Cup is only every four years, and that's a lot of years in a soccer player's career," the 25-year-old says. "We're going to be playing games while the World Cup is going on, so hopefully that does take away the sting."

Instead of looking toward the summer, Agudelo's yearlong sights are set on a December match, specifically a desire to be playing in the MLS Cup on Dec. 8. He hopes to score 10 or more goals this season, while helping lead New England to the title game in head coach Brad Friedel's first year. The Revs kicked off their season earlier this month, and Agudelo, who is entering his fifth season with the team, gave us a peek into what his game day is like. / Matt Martinelli

GAME DAY

From an app that wakes him up to an evening filled with movies, Juan Agudelo fills us in on his routine when the Revs are playing a Saturday night home game.

MORNING:

I sleep in as long as I can. I try to get up on the lowest part of my sleep cycle, using an app that wakes you up when you're not in a deep sleep. I eat an omelette on top of toast—it's a pretty big breakfast because I want to eat two meals before the game, not three.

MID-MORNING:

I hang around my place and watch some European soccer games. I try to keep my feet elevated during this time.

MIDDAY:

I make myself some pasta with chicken and tomato sauce. I try to load up on carbs and avoid dairy. I shower and gather my outfit for the stadium. I always say, "Look good, feel good, play good."

MID-AFTERNOON:

I get in the car and make my way to Gillette Stadium, about a 25 minute drive. During the ride, I listen to a lot of happy, positive music like Colombian salsa from Grupo Niche, some reggaeton and some light hip-hop—not too crazy—by Big Sean.

EARLY EVENING:

I don't like sitting around or getting to the stadium too early or else I feel too anxious about the game. So I try to arrive two hours before it starts. I get changed and hit the massage table for a light rub to wake up my leg muscles. Then I do a light stretch, watch some video of the opponent and ride the stationary bike for a mile or two. That really gets my blood flowing and gets me warm pretty quickly. Then it's game time.

HALFTIME:

I drink a full Gatorade and lay on the floor, stretching my hamstrings and maybe using some heating pads to keep them warm.

POSTGAME:

I shower, change and do interviews before I go out to see my family. Then I often head home and watch the game again if it was a win. I have trouble sleeping after games, so I stay up watching movies. Occasionally, I go out with a couple of friends to a place like Yvonne's. I actually don't drink alcohol, but I go to listen to some music. Big Papi told me about the restaurant because he's a partner there.

FAST COMPANY: The latest location of Pita sits in the heart of Inman Square

PITA MY HEART

A FAST-CASUAL MIDDLE EASTERN EATERY COMES TO INMAN

PITA CAMBRIDGE
12 Springfield St., Cambridge
(617-945-1214)
pitacambridge.com

Restaurateurs Mohamad El Zein and Radouan Ouassaidi—owners of Moona in Cambridge—are bringing another taste of authentic Middle Eastern-style cuisine to Inman Square. The duo's latest venture, Pita Cambridge, opened its doors in early March, serving fast-casual fare inspired by their childhoods.

"I'm from Lebanon, Rad's from Morocco, so we tend to like to share food and flavors that we grew up with," El Zein says. "That food that we grew up with is really what's inspiring us to do this."

El Zein describes the atmosphere of the restaurant, located in the Springfield Street space formerly occupied by Olecito, as reminiscent of a Middle Eastern bazaar or a souk. With light fixtures hanging from the ceiling, a chalkboard wall featuring the menu and a shawarma machine imported from Turkey, El Zein and Ouassaidi are putting a contemporary spin on their traditional roots with this fourth location of their Pita concept.

"It's very lively and ethnic and a little diverse," El Zein says. "We feel like Inman Square has this grungy, Brooklyn-style feel to it. That's kind of what we're doing with this place, setting it up to be this funky little fast-casual Middle Eastern shack."

The restaurant serves breakfast, lunch and dinner seven days a week alongside a selection of grab-and-go drinks, including Moroccan mint tea served hot or cold. The menu is broken down into sections such as salads, combo plates, pita roll-ups and burgers, with options like the Shawafel, a combination of chicken shawarma and fried falafel wrapped in toasted pita bread, and the lamb shish kabobs salad, marinated tenderloin tossed with Mediterranean greens, peppers, olives, feta cheese and a house vinaigrette.

With seating for six inside and a patio that is expected to accommodate an additional 20-30 guests in warmer weather, El Zein hopes this location will hit its stride alongside Moona.

"Our goal in this location is to under-promise and over-deliver," El Zein explains. "Those are the two major things: under-promise with our price point and over-deliver with what you're getting. That's what we're really looking to do."

Good Eats: Veg Out

Tony Maws, the burger king and chef/owner of Craigie on Main and Kirkland Tap & Trotter, ventures into new territory with his latest invention: the Craigie on Main vegetable burger ($18). "We didn't want this to taste like beef, but we did want it be savory and packed with umami," Maws says of the dish that he worked on for more than a year and is currently served only on Tuesdays. A mixture of roasted mushrooms, fermented black bean powder, pomegranate molasses and tahini is added to a base of black beans, brown rice, lentils and egg for a savory patty that's sandwiched between a housemade bun. Topped with feta, Maws' secret sauce, lettuce, charred red onions and served with pickles, slaw and aioli, the burger's flavors are bold and craveable—even for carnivores. / Nathan Tavares

CULINARY CABARET

La Morra chef de cuisine Emily Vena grew up bingeing VHS tapes of Stephen Sondheim's Broadway plays. So when Chris Falman started working at the Brookline Village spot as pastry chef and showed a passion for theater, she knew she had to get him hooked on Sondheim's musicals. It worked, and a funny thing happened on the way to that friendship: Vena and Falman's passion for the 87-year-old composer grew so much they're staging A Little Feast on March 14 at La Morra. The Sondheim-centered, five-course meal ($100, with a portion of proceeds going to local theater companies) will range from a salad inspired by Into the Woods to dessert meant to evoke Sunday in the Park with George—and each course will be accompanied by the musical number. In a shoutout to Company, there will even be vodka stingers on the cocktail list, but it's the serving of a meat pie from Sweeney Todd that has Falman especially enthused for the night. "This was the first dish we knew we had to do. After that we had to figure out how to twist themes, lyrics and references into appetizing dishes," he says. "And the fun is for Sondheim fans to figure out how and why we created each dish because every course is brimming with both literal and figurative references to its designated Sondheim show." / Matt Martinelli

The Jewish Arts Collaborative is gearing up for what it's billing as the first major piece of Jewish-themed public art in the city. Pathways to Freedom, a multisensory exhibit on Boston Common by London-based social sculptor Julia Vogl, is inspired by the universal theme of immigration and the search for freedom found in the Passover story. Through a series of what Vogl calls "encounters" at various spots across the Boston area from March 20 to April 8, she will interview people about their ideas of immigration and freedom and help them create a unique Pathways button that will then become part of the artwork at the Parkman Bandstand, on display from April 25 to May 2. The site isn't meant as a counterpoint to the "free speech" rally that was also held there in August and drew members of the alt-right, but Pathways is still expected to provide a unifying contrast to that divisive incident. Audio of personal stories will also be played at the bandstand, giving visitors a more immersive experience. To paint a picture of the effort behind the exhibit, we dove into the numbers behind Vogl's undertaking. / Nathan Tavares

SEE SEAPORT SEESAWS

If you can't wait till April for an uplifting dose of public art, head to the Seaport Commons before April 16 to play on the Seaport x Impulse installation, which has made previous stops in London, Brussels and Chicago. The 12 illuminated seesaws make sound as users bop up and down, and their changing lights are meant to help lighten users' moods.

BLOSSOM BAR
295 Washington St.,
Brookline (617-734-1870)

YUM, RUM!: Blossom Bar serves tropical-inspired cocktails in Brookline Village.

Drink of the Moment
BOCADILLO SOUR

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Bacardi Carta Blanca, guava paste, mascarpone, lime, mint

BACKGROUND: Blossom Bar's Will Isaza translated a piece of his Colombian childhood—eating sweet and salty bites before and after holiday meals—into this "super refreshing" take on a daiquiri that has a dash of dairy. "You get a lot of texture from the mascarpone, similar to what you get from an egg white, but not as rich or heavy," says Isaza, who churned over different styles, including Philadelphia Cream Cheese, before landing on this one from Vermont Creamery that's sourced from neighbor Curds & Co.

RUM RUNNERS: Nearly a decade after opening cocktail haven Baldwin Bar in Woburn's Sichuan Garden II, Ran Duan revamped his retiring father's 20-year-old Brookline Village spot with a mid-century vibe, a streamlined, spice-filled food menu and a tropical bar program that's heavy on rum, but also features cachaça and pisco. "Ran and I grew up in different parts of the world, but we somehow ended up drinking and eating very similar things," Isaza says. "It's a little bit confusing—I'm not gonna lie—for people to walk in and to be like, 'I'm having Sichuan-style Chinese food and South American drinks. What's going on here?' But once you have it, it makes sense."

SECOND ROUND: Isaza's stoked to be offering the anise-flavored spirit aguardientes, which you'll find in the Angie Valencia ($13)—named for the Colombian beauty queen turned suspected drug smuggler—with Aperol, papaya, lemon and kaffir lime. / Sarah Hagman

SPEAKING UP

Uzodinma Iweala has been putting pen to paper since childhood, scribbling sci-fi stories in homemade notebooks. Thirteen years after publishing his debut novel Beasts of No Nation as a Harvard undergrad, he's finished Speak No Evil, about a closeted Nigerian-American teen who's outed by his white friend. We chatted before Iweala stops at Harvard Book Store on March 22 to present the recently released book. / Cathryn Haight

WHAT'S THE INSPIRATION BEHIND SPEAK NO EVIL? I don't think it was any one thing. I'm from Washington D.C. and I was really interested in writing about Washington D.C. as a living city. If you grow up in the city or around the city, then you know that politics is the town business, but at the same time, it's a city with real people who live real lives that are touched by, but not entirely in, the political space.

DO YOU HAVE A SET PLAN BEFORE YOU START WRITING? I tend to be more of a scribbler when there's an idea in my head I want to address. I scribble sometimes for years. There's a period of time when all the scribbles have to become something, and that's when I map. I'm pretty psycho about mapping out my work. I like to write by hand and do pages of outlines that don't make sense to anybody—even me. I tend to work on blank 8-by-11 sheets of printer paper because lines really bother me. I will then use index cards. My poor editor had to sit down with me once for four hours with 300 index cards with everything from characters to setting to plot organization.

CHARACTERS COMING OF AGE ARE COMMON IN YOUR NOVELS. WHY IS THAT? I'm really interested in the idea of transition periods. I think that those fissures hold a lot of tension, and that's what propels characters to try and discover who they are. Sometimes they succeed, and sometimes they fail.

GRAVE MANNER

A TV WRITER'S LATEST NOVEL FOCUSES ON A SET OF COLLEGE MURDERS

The Graves* by Pamela Wechsler
Published by Minotaur Books, 326 pages, $26

IN THIS FOLLOW-UP TO PAMELA WECHSLER'S Mission Hill, Abby Endicott returns to the Boston streets as the chief of the district attorney's homicide unit. And Abby's trademark energy is matched only by the sophisticated pace of the story crafted by Wechsler, a Tufts and Boston University Law grad who was a prosecutor before becoming a TV writer.

Abby's the daughter of upper-crust Louisburg Square parents who don't appreciate her work: It's too gritty. But she surges forth, working on a case in which students from local colleges have been murdered. The prime suspect in the serial killings is a Harvard-educated son of a U.S. senator, who Abby discovers is hosting pimping-parties involving some of the victims who needed money.

Abby is also aiming to become district attorney, and the murder case entwines many of her relationships—professional and romantic. Wechsler presents these lively connections with wry wit, crafting a character who's aware she's a bad, elusive, often-unwisely-tempted girlfriend with an overspending habit at Saks Fifth Avenue, an image that sits uncomfortably beside her hard-driving persona at work. Abby experiences romantic surges toward a fellow upper-class man, Chip Aldridge, as her serious boyfriend's long-ago drug record threatens to impede her career. Also jeopardizing her hopes of becoming the district attorney is Abby's Brahmin mother, who ends up entangled in a dust-up of her own. Wechsler's book is full of fascinating surprises, especially the results of the murder investigation.

FROM PAGE 46: "Abigail, you look wonderful," my mother says, "but I think it's time to retire that blouse."

She never misses the opportunity to critique my wardrobe, even when she's three sheets to the wind.

Missy gives me a kiss. "I think you look fabulous, as always," she says.

I gotta give Missy credit; six months into the marriage, and she's already defying my mother. ◆

Traveler's Check

Traveling to Trancoso during the holidays and our winter months comes with both higher temperatures and prices, but visiting in the third week of January means you can see the town's most important festival, the Festa Sao Sebastiao. Locals party all night on the Quadrado, and at dawn, the men go into the forest to cut down the tree trunk that will be painted and erected in front of the church, connecting the earth and heavens in a Bahian mix of Catholic and indigenous rituals.

BAHIA'S SHANGRI-LA

THE SECRET MIGHT SOON BE OUT ON THIS BRAZILIAN PARADISE

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON, TRAVEL writers encounter the hardship of visiting a destination so unspoiled and undeveloped that they're faced with a Catch-22: either shout from the rooftops how enchanting the place is (and risk its discovery by hordes of objectionable tourists) or keep the secret to themselves (and fail to do their jobs).

Trancoso, in Brazil's northeast state of Bahia, is one of those places. Among the oldest settlements on the coast where the Portuguese first made landfall in the 1500s, it was essentially abandoned for 500 years and rediscovered by hippies in the 1970s. One local described her parents buying their first house there by bartering it for a battery-powered radio and a sack of rice. Now protected as a UNESCO World Heritage Site, there are no telephone lines above ground, or any other modern eyesores to intrude on the sense that you've stepped back in time. The heart of the town is a village green called the Quadrado, perched high on a bluff overlooking the ocean and surrounded by candy-colored fisherman's shacks. By day, it is nearly deserted, but at night, illuminated by fairy lights, it comes alive with soccer matches, vendors, musicians and couples out for a stroll. Since the '70s, the hippies have stayed—and the town finally got electricity in 1982—but a discerning international crowd has also moved in: Boston's own Brazilian-born couture swimwear designer, Sinesia Karol, has a shop there, and the likes of Anderson Cooper and Georgina Brandolini D'adda have homes too. Despite that, it's about as far from glitzy as you can get. Brazilians joke that Trancoso is where rich people go to act like they're poor, and you'll see Sao Paulo society fixtures engaged in friendly haggling with local fishermen about which fresh catch they want for lunch.

Inserted into this tropical idyl is Uxua Casa Hotel and Spa. The brainchild of Wilbert Das, the fashion genius who built Diesel into an international brand, the hotel's aesthetic is "new is good, but old is better, and everything should be made by hand." To that end, one of the rooms that guests pass through to reach the Quadrado contains a working loom, where a local artisan weaves the textiles that grace the rooms, while a Pataxó Indian sits in the gift shop, hand-painting centuries-old, traditional designs on different wares. Each casa is named for its local association: the midwife who lived in one, or the old man famous for burning almescar resin in front of his house and entertaining kids with stories and tricks.

Set amid gardens that do an admirable impersonation of Eden—monkeys in the trees, butterflies fluttering everywhere and jewel-colored hummingbirds pollinating a variety of blindingly beautiful flowers—there's a central common area. That's where you'll find the swimming pool, which is lined with locally mined crystals believed to have healing properties. Adjoining the pool is an open-air living/dining area decorated with Amazonian artifacts and custom details like a terra-cotta planter that looks like it's climbing up the stairs on legs made out of mangrove roots. In keeping with its ultra-private vibe, only guests or staff members are allowed on the property, with the exception of the restaurant out front, which is open to the public.

The hotel itself isn't located on the beach. For that, guests exit onto the far end of the Quadrado, taking a right toward the whitewashed 16th-century church. Beachgoers descend through a tropical forest to a mangrove swamp, where the same narrow, rickety wooden bridge has taken fishermen to the sea for centuries. Numerous cafes line the palm-shaded zone between the mangroves and the Atlantic, but Uxua has its own beach bar, consisting of daybeds with cocktail tables, and a central lounge with a thatched roof, where an old fishing boat serves as a bar and one of Brazil's top DJs spins smooth Bahian bossa nova that sets the perfect mood. The beach cafe's local cuisine is superb—the fish tacos are exquisite—but don't be afraid to sample the food, such as casquinhas de siri or crab cakes served in the shell, that the locals sell while walking up and down the beach.

While Uxua's Almescar Spa, located on the hotel's grounds, is unsurprisingly excellent, the foot and leg massages offered by robust locals on the beach are pretty damn close to heaven. For roughly 70 Brazilian reals ($21.50), you'll receive 50 minutes of reflexology and lower-body work that one guest described as a "toegasm." (Moreover, how they manage to get every last grain of sand off their customers' feet is nothing short of miraculous.) They offer full-body work, as well, and the beach massages offer a couple of advantages over the spa: 1) You can sip a passion fruit caipirinha all the while, and 2) as soon as you're done, you can go tearing into the surf.

For a change of scenery, Uxua will arrange for a boat to transport you to Praia do Espelho, a beach 30 minutes away, where the caipirinhas are still cold and the Restaurante da Silvinha offers a distinct dining experience. Run by a legendary local, it's a three-room shack that serves a delicious set menu and draws cognoscenti from miles away.

There are, of course, countless other activities, from snorkeling and diving to cooking or capoeira lessons, but ultimately Trancoso is all about the beach. After touching down at Uxua, the most delicious kind of torpor sets in, so that spending all day by the water and all evening on the Quadrado never gets boring. Maybe, you'll be too entranced to spread the word. Some secrets are worth keeping. ◆

GRASSONA'S FILLS A FAMILIAR, HOMEY NICHE IN BROOKLINE

RESTAURANTS DISAPPEAR WITH THE regularity of sunsets: Every week some operator quits, retires or opts out of a jacked-up lease. Less often, a restaurateur hits the reset button on a thriving concern, trying a fresh look, concept and menu. That's what owner Steve Bowman recently did with his four-year-old Fairsted Kitchen, transforming it from a restaurant that skittered eccentrically between pan-Mediterranean, gastropub and haute-vegetarian conceits into something familiar: a casual joint called Grassona's Italian. Much as I enjoyed Fairsted's food, it was tough to describe. With chef Phil Dwyer (a veteran of Fairsted and Ribelle) in the kitchen, the new place has no such problem: Think North End red sauce, but with better details and a superior beverage program.

So a vegetable antipasto ($11/four selections) includes a superior version of eggplant caponata ("I remember this from Ribelle," beams a friend), good giardiniera, sweet roasted peppers and super-tangy marinated mushrooms. Baked stuffed clams casino ($4 each), smallish stuffies topped with crisp bacon, are a fine idea. Phil's slow-braised meatballs ($12) draw tender depths from pork, beef, veal, bacon and chorizo, and feature a sweet, bright sugo. Mussels fra diavolo ($11) offer a generous, pristine portion of bivalves for the price, the tomato sauce vividly spiked with dried chili and fat, briny capers.

Italian wedding soup ($8) floats a pile of smaller-bore, simpler meatballs in good chicken broth with kale and rice, simple and hearty. By contrast, white bean soup ($9) appears to have picked up a French accent somewhere: It's delicate, silky and creamy. Caesar salad ($9) with smoked anchovies and lots of good Parmesan and black pepper loses style points but gains shareability with its torn-up romaine.

Grassona's doesn't deliver the most Instagrammable evening out: homely comfort generally trumps comely platings here. So while fettuccine Alfredo ($16) is almost blindingly pale and featureless but for a dusting of nutmeg, it's nevertheless a winsome version of an often heavy, lifeless standby, wreaking lightness out of simple butter and Parmesan. Dwyer's rich, long-cooked meat sauces shine in two dishes: rigatoni with lamb ragu ($19) and pappardelle Bolognese ($22). Lasagna alla norma ($18) is one of the lovelier vegetarian pasta dishes I've sampled in a while, exquisitely interweaving pignoli, housemade ricotta, more of that terrific caponata and an ethereal parsnip crema. Only the ambitious calamarata ($23) flops, its loops of wide pasta ribbons sauced with a shellfish puttanesca that is fatally overperfumed by smoked olives.

The hefty mains are mostly straightforward and unpretentious, like an enormous braised pork shank osso buco ($28) that has the unchallenging virtues of a Yankee pot roast: tender, substantial and bland, its foundation of root-vegetable risotto barely registers. Roast sausages ($19) are similarly gentle in flavor, though their bed of white beans and greens yields welcome, vinegary snap. Whole bone-in branzino piccata ($29) is skillfully cooked and zippily sauced with lemon, capers and white wine. A couple of parmigiana-style cutlets (eggplant, $17; chicken, $19) accompanied by red-sauced thin fettucine are solid if undistinguished efforts. The one real head-turner is a photogenic, refined veal porterhouse saltimbocca ($36), an elegant and delectable array of veal, crisp/creamy fontina polenta squares, hard-fried prosciutto and fried whole sage leaves. It's a tantalizing glimpse of what a pricier, tonier Grassona's might have been. Desserts are serviceable, like an espresso semifreddo ($10) that reads rather ice-cream-like, and the better, bracingly salty chocolate buddino ($11) with a white chocolate/cherry cookie for dipping.

The bar appears certain to continue Fairsted's tradition of attracting sophisticated neighborhood drinkers and a late-night industry crowd with classic and creative craft cocktails ($12) like the Nibgroni of genever, cocoa-nib infused Campari and sweet vermouth. There's a short, sharp, New England-centric beer list ($3.50-$9, six drafts and two packaged). The amaro assortment ($7-$10) boasts welcome rarities like Pasubio ($7), which combines acerbic mountain botanicals with a fruitier, lighter fortified-wine base, and Alta Verde ($7), a wormwood-laced Alpine gobsmacker with a captivating golden hue. The wine program offers both weeknight affordability by the glass (10 options, $8-$13; house carafes, $25) and some rarified heights in a fascinating 50-bottle list. It's mostly Italian, helpfully categorized (north, central, south), and tosses in a few Americans, with solid under-$50 offerings in every region and value-priced stunners above $100. We found joy in a 2015 Cavallotto Grign ($59), a pale-red pleaser from the Langhe region of Piedmont, and felt like smart shoppers splurging on a 2012 Casanova di Neri Brunello ($114).

Service reflects Bowman's own gentle-hearted, enthusiastic attentiveness. The room's post-Fairsted makeover likewise imparts a warming glow as the walls are now painted burgundy and white, lined with jars of pickles and dried pasta, and there's candles flickering in straw-covered Chianti bottles. Cocktail glasses and serving plates are handsome mismatched antiques, down to wee porcelain saltcellars for grated cheese and red-pepper flakes. With its accumulation of cozy, sincere touches, the place evokes something many local red-sauce palaces strain for yet rarely achieve: an actual whiff of Italian-American grandma cooking, with all its rustic simplicity, generosity and eagerness to please. In a business where second acts are always tricky, Grassona's is a damn charming one. ◆

Q: I HAVE CREPINESS AND FINE LINES AROUND MY EYES THAT MAKE ME LOOK OLDER; WHAT IS MY BEST TREATMENT OPTION?

A: Yes, eventually many of us will start to develop fine wrinkles around the eyes; our skin is very thin there. This is a situation where we would have to see you in person in order to do an evaluation. There are several possible solutions depending upon the level and exact location of crepiness and fine lines, whether there is also laxity or loose skin, your age and how deep the lines are.

Possible solutions would range from certain home-care products to radio-frequency (RF) skin tightening, Botox injections, fractional laser treatments, Ultherapy or eyelid surgery. The best approach for you depends on several factors, and sometimes a combination of treatments will yield the best outcome. The good news is that there is a solution, so please come and see us!

TIME TO REFRACT

WITH ANNIHILATION, THE DIRECTOR OF EX MACHINA RESEQUENCES SCI-FI DNA

THE FILMS THAT LONDON-BORN ALEX Garland has been involved in during his career are certainly full of ideas. In the case of Ex Machina—the novelist-turned-screenwriter's debut picture as a writer/director—he crammed in too many ideas. And both of the sci-fi thrillers he scripted for director Danny Boyle, 28 Days Later and Sunshine, tended to abandon a lot of those ideas during their third acts, with cerebral notions giving way to slasher-movie thrills. Even Ex Machina devolved into a knife-wielding bloodbath during its final stretch, undercutting the film's existential questions with visceral thrills.

But Annihilation, Garland's second foray as a writer/director, relies far more on hard, heady concepts, even as it focuses on a mysterious mission undertaken by five female scientists armed with assault rifles. Sure, those guns occasionally get fired, but the real violence is psychological.

Natalie Portman stars as Lena, a cellular biologist who teaches at Johns Hopkins University when she's not holed up in the home she once shared with her husband, Kane (Ex Machina's Oscar Isaac). Garland quickly establishes that Lena has retreated from life, her hollow eyes occasionally welling up with tears as she struggles to accept the fact that she may never again see her husband who deployed a year ago on his own secretive mission. After six months of inquiring about his whereabouts, she was faced with the reality that her husband might be dead. That is, until he reappears one night.

Or does he? Although he looks the same, he's a bit different. Robotically sitting at their kitchen table, the once-vibrant Kane is even more of a blank than his shell-shocked wife. He's oddly unable to answer her most basic questions, his eyes more deadened than hers. Throughout this sequence, Garland and cinematographer Rob Hardy (another holdover from Ex Machina) focus the center of the frame on a glass of water that sits on the table in front of Kane. It refracts the man's fingers as they pass behind it, distorting them as they slither in and out like eels. This detail is no accident, so try not to forget it when a drop of blood mixes with the water as Kane lifts the glass to take a sip. Soon, he's convulsing in an ambulance as it's surrounded by heavily armed government agents who seize the sick man while involuntarily sedating his distraught wife.

Disoriented, Lena awakens inside a research facility overseen by Dr. Ventress (Jennifer Jason Leigh), a psychologist who informs her where Kane (who's struggling to survive, hooked up to ventilators in a quarantined room nearby) has—or perhaps hasn't—been for the past year. The scientific complex borders the edge of "Area X," a southern swath of coastal marshland that has been enveloped by "The Shimmer," a translucent, glistening—and growing—field of energy that resembles a massive soap bubble, filled with swirling colors evoking the oily patches that appear on rain-slicked roads. Kane was part of an expedition to pass through The Shimmer on a mission to reach the epicenter of Area X—a meteor-striken lighthouse—and he's the only one to have emerged from it. Until now, that is.

The story, you see, is told in flashback, framed by sequences of Lena as she's questioned by a hazmat-suited scientist (Doctor Strange's Benedict Wong) who wants to know what Lena witnessed during her hallucinogenic journey that we see unfold over the course of the film's nearly 2-hour running time. Led by Dr. Ventress, Lena joins this "suicide mission" that also includes paramedic Anya Thorensen (Gina Rodriguez, star of TV's Jane the Virgin), anthropologist Cass Sheppard (Tuva Novotny) and physicist Josie Radek (Tessa Thompson) in the hopes of understanding what happened to her husband, and perhaps discovering the key to saving him.

As sci-fi setups go, this isn't a bad one, and it's one that will be familiar to readers of novelist Jeff VanderMeer's popular Southern Reach Trilogy. However, those same readers might be puzzled by Garland's extremely loose adaptation of the trilogy's first book. Rather than hew closely to VanderMeer's text, Garland relies on the novel more as inspiration, refracting elements of the book through the prism of other sci-fi properties. A terrifying beast that stalks the women owes a large debt to the Alzabo in Gene Wolfe's The Sword of the Lictor, while the most notable influence is Andrei Tarkovsky's Stalker, a 1979 movie (also loosely based on a novel) that follows another small group as they venture into The Zone, a government-controlled region reclaimed by nature that was struck years before by a meteor.

And yet, rather than a remix, Garland's refraction creates something that feels disquieting and new, as if the DNA of these disparate influences has merged and recombined into something alien and strangely beautiful—thanks in no small part to the contributions of production designer Mark Digby and composers Geoff Barrow and Ben Salisbury, all veterans of Ex Machina. While viewers conditioned to expect spoon-fed answers to tidy narratives might want to stick with properties like Star Wars (you can get your Oscar Isaac fix there, too), those up for a challenge should prepare to lose themselves in the dreamlike qualities of Annihilation's aural and visual design, which transforms nightmares into a work of art. ◆

DECODED

BROOKLINE-BRED GUITAR TRAILBLAZER DECIPHERS BOTH SOUND AND WORDS

JAZZ GUITARIST MARY HALVORSON'S CAREER features some odd cross-genre ventures, from the roiling rock trio People to fellow six-string maverick Marc Ribot's jagged Young Philadelphians, a band that grooves on Philly soul and covers disco classics.

Halvorson's own projects include solo jazz standards, a composed octet and power trio Thumbscrew. When she wanted to write lyrics for another vocalist in her new quintet Code Girl, reflecting on favorite singer/composers as eclectic as Robert Wyatt, Elliott Smith and Fiona Apple, accessibility wasn't her goal.

"It's funny, because I don't really think about things like that," Halvorson, 37, says. "I kinda had no idea what this [group] would come out like. ... But it's definitely not a jazz vocal sound."

It's not like the Brookline native needs a profile boost in the wake of DownBeat's 2017 Critics' Poll, which named Halvorson the top guitarist over the likes of Bill Frisell, Pat Metheny and John Scofield. "It was something of a shock, and it feels amazing to be alongside some of my favorite guitarists," she says. "I'm really thankful for stuff like that because it's an opportunity for people to check out your music."

Her music can be harder to wrap one's ears around. Unlike those other players, easily identifiable by cushiony processed tones, Halvorson favors a prickly, clean hollow-body sound over the cyclical blur and wobble of her effects pedals, filling a void between early jazz idol Wes Montgomery and noise-rockers like Sonic Youth.

"Because I'm not a poet or lyricist, I didn't feel impeded by any pre-existing technique."

"The beauty of the guitar is [that] there's so much you can do with it, with sound alone," Halvorson says, citing late exposure to jazz as a reason that she's probably more influenced by rock and folk. "The guitar lends itself to shape-shifting."

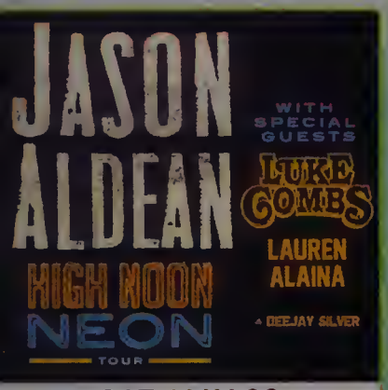
Her first instrument was the violin, but she didn't enjoy playing in orchestras. At age 11, Halvorson discovered Jimi Hendrix: "I was more interested in that, and something about the excitement and improvisational energy coming from Hendrix made me decide to take up the guitar."

Halvorson didn't embrace jazz by design. Her parents bought a cheap Stratocaster like Hendrix's guitar and supported lessons. She ended up studying with local jazz player Issi Rozen and revisited her dad's record collection to absorb Miles Davis, John Coltrane and Thelonious Monk, even if the melodies hooked her more than improvisations—at first. "Like any music I've grown to love, it often takes time," Halvorson says. "The more you learn about it, the more interesting it gets."

From Brookline High, she headed to Wesleyan University to study biology but came under the spell of Anthony Braxton, a revered saxophonist/composer in avant-garde circles who taught there. "It didn't occur to me when I was in high school or starting college that music could be a career for me," Halvorson says. "Maybe I'm just a practical person. It didn't seem like a practical thing to do."

Braxton encouraged Halvorson to find her own voice, be open-minded and not be afraid to make mistakes, Halvorson says, adding, "At some point, I just dropped my science courses." Lessons with guitarist Joe Morris had a similar effect; he played standup bass to her guitar, improvising beyond the lure of imitation.

Female role models, particularly on guitar, were hard to find when she started—but not now. "I have a lot of female students, and I see a shift in momentum," Halvorson says. "It's not uncommon for me to play in bands where women outnumber men."



For Code Girl, she drafted Amirtha Kidambi, a classically trained vocalist of South Indian heritage. Bassist Michael Formanek and drummer Tomas Fujiwara (both of Thumbscrew) and trumpeter Ambrose Akinmusire round out the group, whose eponymous debut drops March 30. Code Girl plays two of Halvorson's former teenage haunts, the Regattabar (where Adam O'Farrill subs on trumpet) on March 29 and the Newport Jazz Festival on Aug. 4.

"Because I'm not a poet or lyricist, I didn't feel impeded by any pre-existing technique," says Halvorson, who wrote largely abstract lyrics and formed music around them, accommodating irregular rhythms to set up Kidambi's phrasing with eclectic art-song freedom. "It was pure experimentation, which was a lot of fun." ◆

MAINE MAN

ON THE HUNT FOR GREENER PASTURES

I GREW UP IN THE MIDDLE OF NOWHERE, which is in Maine. The nearest outpost of civilization was Portland, and back then Portland was just a guy who looked like the Gorton's fisherman yelling at a moose to get off his dock. But land in the boonies was Louisiana Purchase cheap, and so I grew up on 30 acres with the trappings of farm life, including pigs named Lenore and Bernice, a murderous pony named Miss Piggy and chickens that got methodically abducted by a local raccoon. I guess we tend to mythologize our own childhoods, but it still seems pretty awesome that I was driving around the woods in my own car at age 11.

Thus, I suppose it's unsurprising that lately I've caught the bug for country life, in the form of a gnawing feeling that my ambitions cannot be contained by a suburban house lot. To cite just one example, my neighbors are probably not huge fans of my snow gun. To create on-demand sledding for my kids, ages 6 and 7, I bought a mini version of the snowmakers you see at ski resorts. Then I constructed a giant ramp that I named Mount Diablo. It all worked great, with the exception that the snow gun requires a massive air compressor and a pressure washer, and I hadn't fully considered noise abatement when I developed my plan for a driveway ski resort. But suffice it to say that if you had a neighbor who left an air compressor and a pressure washer running all night outside, you might wish that person would move to a more remote location. So that's what we've been investigating.

Given our desire for a reasonable financial outlay, we have two potential courses: either buy a cheap piece of land and build on it, or buy a fixer-upper with some acreage. The latter option is what my parents did back in the day, although they never fully got around to the fixing. Their plans went from, "We'll definitely move the water heater that's sitting on cinder blocks in the middle of the kitchen," to "You know, after a while, you don't even notice the water heater on cinder blocks in the middle of the kitchen."

But even empty land can be problematic. Early in this process, we scoped out a seemingly attractive plot. But when the real estate agent sent us the document elaborating on "restrictions," it turned out that the property was part of a homeowner's association, with an architectural commission headed by someone with a name like Florence Witherbuckle. And Florence would decide acceptable fence colors and whether you were using your property in a "noxious" manner. I have a feeling that Florence and I would have differing ideas on the topics of, say, backyard motocross parks and offseason fireworks, so we crossed that place off the list.

Another piece of land was far down an unpaved road that led to a single house, which was festooned with all manner of signs and flags that seemed intended to let potential buyers know exactly what their closest neighbor is all about. My wife, Heather, took one look and said, "I'm not living next to this gosh-darn chucklehead." She didn't use those exact words, but you get the idea. Let's just say that if that guy were a Civil War reenactor, he definitely wouldn't own a blue uniform.

So we moved onto the fixer-uppers. One place had a gorgeous setting, surrounded by woods and fields. But when we visited it with a contractor, reality set in. There would likely be asbestos. A nearby tree was threatening the foundation. There was a pond, and even that was a problem. "As you can see," he said, "the pond is leaking." I nodded gravely, as if I knew that ponds can leak. Of course it's leaking. Probably need to go in there and caulk the pond drain, I reckon. "You could get this place in pretty good shape for $300,000, though," he said. You know, maybe my neighbors could just get used to the snow gun.

I hadn't fully considered noise abatement when I developed my plan for a driveway ski resort.

The next place we looked at was less tragic but still daunting. It was an ex-bed-and-breakfast that now had tenants in various rooms. We made our way through the house while annoyed renters scuttled to and fro and the real estate agent said things like, "Oh, that's Dave! He's very private. OK, let's go in his room." The house was dated, but I could see it renovated, with chickens running around the backyard and the distant next-door neighbor riding past on his ATV. That didn't take much imagination, since there were chickens running around out back and a distant next-door neighbor riding past on his ATV.

As it stands, we're still looking, unsure if we're totally serious about all this. I'm simultaneously excited about this idea and half hoping that the fever passes without action. After all, I hate moving and I like being within five minutes of a Starbucks. But I have a feeling that next winter, I'll be shooting fireworks off Mount Diablo. While the kids drive past in their car. ◆

SOUND ADVICE ON MILLENNIALS, CAT-FRIENDLY UNITS AND EXTRAVAGANT WEDDINGS

JOHN D. SPOONER IS AN INVESTMENT ADVISER, author and novelist. His most recent book is No One Ever Told Us That: Money and Life Lessons for Young Adults. Here, he responds to queries from advice seekers of all ages. Send your conundrums to thedance@improper.com.

ADVENTURE ADDICTS: The millennial generation is often hit with some fierce stereotypes.

I'm a single, millennial woman, and all I read about my generation is how entitled, lazy, misinformed and uninterested in anything from the past we are. I totally disagree, and it makes my friends and me furious. The biggest thing we do care about? Happiness. What's so wrong with that? Well, there are now more millennials than any other cadre in the country, so we'd better pay attention to you. There are things about your generation that I'm jealous of and that I love. The thing I most love is your spirit of adventure, the sense of wanting it now, not deferring pleasure. This concept would be a sin to most of the older generations, but you're not afraid to explore on the cheap. You created Airbnb and other apps to be your springboards to life. And I love that you may have 20 jobs in your lifetime, not simply one that used to lead to a gold watch after 30 years—you don't even want a gold watch. I have young friends who are backpacking in Patagonia, sailing in French Polynesia and trekking in Nepal. And all of them are doing it inexpensively, embracing adventure and the world. Your worldview is not Somerville, Quincy, Worcester or Newton. It's a global view. You are going to be better equipped to handle the bumps when they inevitably come because you've dared to see the world before you were 50.

I'm in my late 40s and I'm currently engaged to a great woman. The problem is, the whole wedding thing has me freaking out. First of all, it's stupid expensive, and I don't want to spend $50,000 or more on a wedding that is basically a party for a bunch of people I don't even know, not to mention the dress, flowers, honeymoon, etc. We've been living together for six years. I just wish we could have a small quiet ceremony and then get on with our lives. She's really into it, and I don't want to disappoint her, but it's making me sick. Who are we trying to impress? Is there a way to convince my fiancee that a big wedding at our age is a waste, or should I suck it up and stop complaining? The snarky side of me says, "If your prospective in-laws are paying for the wedding, go for it." But I get it. Anything that smacks of "conventional" is long gone. In more than half of the weddings I've been to in the past two years, the ceremony was officiated by someone who got a license for a day to perform the ceremony: a great uncle of the groom, a famous drunk, an owner of a 45-foot catamaran that would take them away from the reception, the eighth-grade English teacher of the bride, and a friend of the bride who read her horoscope and claimed she was a witch.

But even if you two are going to pay for your own wedding—with no help from anyone—you should know this: If your fiancee wants an old-fashioned wedding, do it. If you elope, you'll be setting yourself up for your new wife to eventually proclaim, "You knew I had my heart set on a big wedding!"

Your worldview is not Somerville, Quincy, Worcester or Newton. It's a global view.

I think it's a priceless experience, and you'll make the money back eventually. You both will cherish the pictures and the memories. I'm snarky, but I'm a sucker for big weddings, too. Don't forget the rice and the rose petals.

I live in a large condominium complex just west of Boston. We are allowed cats as pets, but not dogs. One handicapped unit owner was allowed a small comfort dog, and no one took issue with that. Recently, though, I've seen people coming and going with lots of dogs—large breeds at that. There are now several residents that are using comfort dogs as the reason they are permitted to keep the canines. Really. I had no idea there were so many emotionally challenged people out there. Should I try to have a vote taken and see how the majority of owners feel about it? We can always add a "no dogs" rule to the bylaws, but I worry I'm making a mountain out of a molehill. Well, if I've ever heard a no-win situation, this is it. I have a great friend who is fond of saying—in all kinds of situations—"Either way, I'm screwed." With 325 million Americans, for everything you love, there are endless people who will hate it. I live in a building that allows both cats and dogs and everyone is well-behaved, even the owners. A condo or co-op board can issue any rules it wants. But it's very tough to adjudicate "comfort" anything, and discrimination between dog and cat lovers can lead to confrontation, even lawsuits. In my opinion, your board should either say, "no pets at all," or "anything goes."

But are you really surprised that there are "so many emotionally challenged people out there?" Almost everyone I know is emotionally challenged. My comfort creatures are...books. ◆

THE RAPPER DISHES ON TOURING, SPANGLISH PHRASES AND WRITING IN HER SLEEP

EMERGING RAP STAR BIA, 26, WAS BORN BIANCA Landrau in Boston and raised in Medford. Also known as Perico Princess, the half-Puerto Rican, half-Italian singer/songwriter and model debuted on the Oxygen reality TV show Sisterhood of Hip Hop and is signed to Pharrell's record label, i Am Other, in collaboration with RCA. After the release of her debut project, #CholaSeason, she earned nominations for a Latin Grammy and Latin Music Award for her feature on J.Balvin's 2016 hit "Safari." She has toured with Pusha-T and Ariana Grande, and last year she opened for Grande before the concert bombing that killed 23 in Manchester, England. She spends her time in Boston and Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Is it harder to be a woman in the music industry?
BIA: No. I always get that question, but I really don't feel that way. Being a woman is a lot of fun. We have our trials, just like everybody else, but I actually think it makes it better being a woman and doing what I'm doing.

Best part of touring? The performance is number one. Just tapping in with all the fans in different places, and the traveling is so much fun. You get to see so many places, and it's a culture shock everywhere you go.

What's it like when you perform in other countries? I've performed throughout Latin America, and I've noticed that in Latin countries, I get a lot of love. They just embrace me so much, which I'm so grateful for. Especially because with Spanish, I'm still learning and it's been great to travel in these countries and get the feedback that I have.

Once you hit the big time, what was the biggest extravagance you gave yourself? To be honest, I'm not someone who indulges myself. I'm more about taking care of the people around me and making sure everybody has what they need. I never went out and said, "Oh, I want this car," or whatever. I'm taking care of a couple of other people, too.

Is it easier for you to write because you can draw from two different languages? It's not easier, but it brings a different perspective. And it gives me more options, and there's a wider range for people to relate to.

Favorite music festival you've played? I loved playing at the Hellow Festival in Monterrey, Mexico. That was my favorite to date.

Favorite venue? The Ziggo Dome in Amsterdam. It's such a cool venue, and it was such a great crowd. I loved it.

Top three things in heavy rotation on your playlist? I'm listening to a lot of SZA, a lot of Rich the Kid and a lot of reggae mixes.

Favorite piece of equipment for making music? When I record at home, there's this little thing that goes over the mic. I don't know what it's called, but it's like a big blue ball, and you can record in open spaces with it and it makes everything sound better. I love using that thing.

Three adjectives that describe your fashion sense? Edgy, chic and fly.

Word that you overuse the most? In writing songs, I don't really have one, but in speaking, I say, "It's lit" way too much.

Is Boston a good place for rap and hip-hop? For people starting out, absolutely, because Boston has one of the best underground rap fan bases and a lot of venues that cater to early rap acts, like the Sinclair, and the Paradise Rock Club and the Middle East. I played at all those places. There are just a lot of ways to reach the people.

"I encourage people to listen to their local artists. Listen to the people who don't necessarily have a billboard."

Do you ever write in your sleep? That's so crazy you say that. No one's ever asked me that, but yes! It happens to me all the time. I'll go to sleep with an idea, or I'll have something running through my mind, and I'll wake up and say, "I have to write this down, so I don't forget it by the morning." It happens to me quite often.

What other forms of music inspire you? I love listening to music with no lyrics sometimes. Just beats and instruments, melodies with no lyrics. That really gets my creative juices flowing. And I like to listen to music from other cultures. I listen to a lot of Brazilian music, a lot of reggae, even rap from other countries like Germany or Holland.

One thing people would be surprised to know about you? People never expect me to be nice or as relatable as I am. I'm kind of private when it comes to social media. A lot of artists are more open and interactive with their fans. They show their lives a lot more. If a lot of people saw my life, I think they'd say, "Oh, this makes a lot more sense. I can really relate to her."

Any desire to act in movies? Absolutely. I think every entertainer wants that. I just see myself as an entertainer as a whole. Music's just my passion, but I'd definitely love to act.

Most overrated rapper of all time? I think people overhype a lot of new rappers all the time. Every three months there's someone saying, "This is the greatest rapper of all time," and he's been out for like six months. Then, two years later, you never hear from them again. It's the test of time. I just like to see who's still here.

Who's the most underrated or underappreciated? I can name you a zillion artists who are underrated. There are a lot of local artists who don't have the resources to get into everyone's headphones or onto those playlists. I encourage people to listen to their local artists. Listen to the people who don't necessarily have a billboard. Check them out.

Favorite Spanglish phrase? Well, right now, it's "Oye, papi," because ever since "Safari" came out, everyone comes up to me and says that. I'd like to think I popularized that.

Thing you miss most about Boston when you're not here? Besides my family—who I miss so, so much—the food. Boston has such great seafood, and I really miss that.

Would you ever consider cutting your hair short? No, I wouldn't do a short 'do, but I will switch it up. I went blond this year. I've changed the color. But I'm never doing a Halle Berry thing.

Favorite fashion designer? I love this designer out of Russia, Ksenia Schnaider. Their stuff is really, really dope. Reconstructed jeans that are really fun, and stuff. And Y/Project, out of Paris. I love their stuff.

So when do you think you'll win a Grammy? I can't call it. I have no idea, but hopefully this year. The next Grammys is what I'm shooting for. ◆

Total hours that the public's invited to breeze into the deCordova Sculpture Park and Museum on April 4-8 and 11-15 to watch artists Jong Oh and Ian McMahon install Sculpting with Air (and even chat with them daily in the afternoon). Minimalist sculptor Oh will be stringing up fishing wire, painted threads, Plexiglas and wooden rods throughout two galleries, while McMahon sprays plaster on inflated plastic models to erect the 65-by-25 foot Tether, his largest piece yet. See the final products from April 20 to Sept. 30, when visitors can also catch time-lapse videos of the sculptors breathing life into their work.

Q&A

with Stephanie Sparling Williams

The Addison Gallery's latest exhibit takes aim at America's firearms fixation, pulling works from its collection that date back to the Civil War. We shot the breeze with assistant curator Stephanie Sparling Williams about what's in the cross hairs in Gun Country, on display through July 31. / Sarah Hagman

HOW IS THE EXHIBIT ORGANIZED? It's just about a little over 40 works, and they will be arranged in thematic clusters. For example, we are showing several of Dick Durrance II's works from an important series of Vietnam pictures called Where Wor Lives. Those will all be together on one wall. We'll also be showing some amazing photos from photography legend Harold Edgerton, thinking about the gun as it's used in advancing the science of photography. And then there's also an interesting wall, where there will be a cluster of images that depict children playing with guns, but then also young adults posing with guns.

CAN YOU DESCRIBE THE SOUND INSTALLATION, SPEAKING OF GUNS, THAT YOU CREATED WITH PHILLIPS ACADEMY STUDENTS? It consists of voices of the students reading snippets from hundreds of excerpts of contemporary music, poetry as well as news headlines, and I collected these over a course of several months. The recordings were made during visits to art classes in which the students, faculty members and I would discuss both sound-based art as a medium for which students could explore for their own creative practices, but then also the prevalence of gun references in popular culture. In the Museum Learning Center, the student voices will actually fill the space with distinctly American words and lyrics that I believe at once overwhelm the space and kind of have this desensitizing effect. ... Students kind of broke out into a singalong because so many times they recognized the lyrics and even though they were kind of extracted from the context within the song, they were able to pick up on them and also recognize, "I'm very familiar with this artist and I never realized that there was actually a gun reference in this song."

WHAT'S ONE PIECE TO LOOK OUT FOR? The earliest piece in the show, which I think is one that's easy to miss because it's so tiny, is an 1865 Edward Kilburn albumen print, and it's just so cool. It's from the Civil War, right as it's ending. I'm not sure we've ever exhibited it. The show will also feature photography favorites like Berenice Abbott, Bill Owens, but also more contemporary works by Mike Mandel and Chantal Zakari. It's a body of work called Shelter in Plotes and it's reflecting on the Boston marathon bombing, but also the subsequent manhunt of the surrounding areas, specifically in Watertown where these artists were actually located. I'm really excited to have it up in the space.

METAMORPHOSIS II AT MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS

ANONYMOUS MAN (1843) AT TRUSTMAN GALLERY

SIGHTINGS, 1709-2012 AT HOLLISTER GALLERY

Set your sights on these curators' five must-see picks from springtime exhibits. / Sarah Hagman

For M.C. Escher: Infinite Dimensions, the Museum of Fine Arts' senior curator of European paintings, Ronni Baer, has pieced together 50 works by the Dutch graphic artist whose puzzling work has widely appeared on album covers and wallpapered dorm walls. It wasn't until a few years before his death in 1972, however, that an arts institution mounted a retrospective of his mind-bending career. Through May 28, the MFA brings the first show of Escher originals to Boston, including the 13-foot-long woodcut Metamorphosis II, filled with swarming bees, a sloping village and a chessboard. "This extremely large print summarizes many of the subjects that fascinated the artist, including tessellations and transformations, and features his beloved birds and fish, figures that appear in many of his works," Baer says. "In a sense, it's a synopsis of his obsessions." And the MFA also tapped chef Barbara Lynch, cellist Yo-Yo Ma and other creatives to muse on how Escher inspired them, including A.R.T. director Diane Paulus who reminisces about dreaming up The Donkey Show.

Get up in arms at Davis Museum through June 10 with Artists Take Action!, featuring 25 recently acquired pièces de résistance that address sexism, racism and other political and social issues. Among the prints and posters, find rallying cries from Obama illustrator Shepard Fairey and the decades-running anonymous collective Guerrilla Girls. Curator Meredith Fluke also points to Francisco de Goya's 1810-20 Disasters of War series, which the Spanish artist created during the clash for the Iberian peninsula—the first that saw guerrilla warfare tactics. "The woman depicted is believed to be Agustina Zaragoza, a supporter of the Spanish militia who fired a cannon at the French army during the Napoleonic siege of Saragossa," Fluke says. "At the same time, Goya's depiction of her as a shadowy faceless entity atop a mass of bodies seems to complicate his caption, Que Calor! (What Courage!)"

For part of Based on a True Story, photographer Edie Bresler asked strangers to literally lend a hand as she created more than 100 cyanotypes of their outstretched arms. And for her March 19-April 19 exhibit, Simmons' Trustman Gallery is also dressing its walls with her new ongoing endeavor Anonymous, sprung from a yearlong illness during which the Somerville resident found herself perusing photography books and struck by unnamed nude subjects. As Bresler invented their life stories, she placed the figures on new backdrops and stitched getups for them, as in Anonymous Man (1843). "The square haircut and wiry build is reminiscent of 19th-century sailors, and from there I make the transition to thinking of Ishmael in Melville's Moby Dick," director B. Lynch says. "The blank slate of an unknown story allows for speculation."

From March 29 through May 4, flock to Babson College to catch a glimpse of Jane Marsching's A bird I do not know, an investigation of the endangered Eskimo curlew, a 12-inch speckled brown bird whose mass migration from Canada to South America at one point turned the skies dark. "It addresses extinction by talking about the question of, 'How and when do we know that we have lost something forever?' " Hollister Gallery director Danielle Krcmar says of the MassArt professor's installation, which includes text, video and a sound component that tries to reproduce the animal's call based on descriptions. "There have been unconfirmed amateur sightings, so while some hold hope that a few members of the species still survive, many believe it is most likely extinct," Krcmar explains. Marsching documents these appearances in Sightings, 1709-2012, an acrylic sheet that spells out Texas, Maine, Labrador and other rumored locations.

Relocating from its 200-square-foot space on Shawmut Avenue, Kabinett Gallery breaks in its SoWa digs with Killers & Thrillers, highlighting the likes of Dana Schutz, Roy Lichtenstein and John Lennon. The inaugural exhibit closes on March 30, but two of the more than 50 artists, Jeff Quinn and Doug Henders, will make an encore appearance a week later in Unreal Estate, which runs through June 30. "Both play with the idea of the genre by interrogating what is real or imagined," says gallery director/owner Gabriel Boyers. Henders, whose handiwork has graced Prince's Around the World in a Day album cover, draws on his background as an Army cartographer in his work, including The Erasers, named after Alain Robbe-Grillet's 1950s mystery novel. Says Boyers: "This painting began with a haunting photograph of a landscape in Cologne, Germany, but has been layered with mysterious forms which interrupt the landscape and confuse the narrative possibilities."

with Craig Robinson

Actor and comedian Craig Robinson may be best known for his role on NBC's The Office or movies like This Is the End and Hot Tub Time Machine, but when he's not making audiences laugh onscreen, he's touring with his band, the Nasty Delicious. Formed in 2007, the group melds electric funk, soul and stand-up for a live performance. We caught up with Robinson before he hits the stage at the Chevalier Theatre on April 6 for the Craig Robinson & the Nasty Delicious tour. / Julia Aparicio

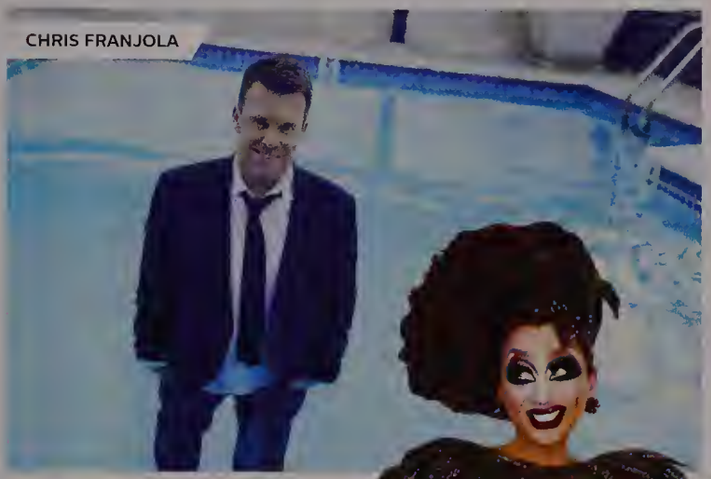
WHERE DID THE NAME NASTY DELICIOUS COME FROM? It just came to me one day. I had a couple other band names—I think one was the Chocolate Love Booger—but they didn't stick. Then one day, Nasty Delicious was just it. Have you ever eaten something that's so good that you make a face like it's nasty? You're eating something delicious, but your face is saying unh! [Laughs.] You don't even understand it [because] it's so good.

DO YOU PREFER PERFORMING ON STAGE OR IN FRONT OF THE CAMERA? Live on stage. It's my work and it's something I've created. On camera, it's things that have been written for me. I revel in it and it's a blast, but being on stage and connecting with people—and having a conversation essentially—there's nothing like it.

FUNNIEST PERSON YOU'VE EVER WORKED WITH? David Alan Grier. He's fearless. He's a majestic human being. ... He's vulnerable in a strong way, and he's brilliant. You immediately feel like he's your best friend. We did a movie called Peeples with Kerry Washington and a bunch of other talented actors, and he was the man. I've been loving David since In Living Color, and then to work with him was an honor.



GREATEST COMEDIC INFLUENCE? I have a long list, but I think Eddie Murphy. I knew I loved Eddie Murphy, but I didn't realize until about 10 years ago maybe—I was watching Raw—and I didn't realize how many mannerisms I've stolen, like his voice and things that I think are funny. They just come out.

TIG NOTARO

For a taste of Colin Quinn's trademark dark humor before his performance at the Wilbur on March 15, catch his turn in Amy Schumer's Trainwreck, where Quinn plays a character, loosely based on Schumer's real-life father, who's suffering from multiple sclerosis. It is a poignant role for the seasoned stand-up comedian, whose portrayal of the obstinate—and often inappropriate—Gordon continuously walks the line between hysterical and heartbreaking.

Bianca Del Rio sashays her way to Royale on March 17 for her Blame It on Bianca Del Rio comedy tour. As the alter ego of comic Roy Haylock, Del Rio slays audiences with her signature unapologetic humor, as showcased by her Judge Judy impersonation during her victorious sixth season on RuPaul's Drag Race.

A former writer and performer for E!'s Chelsea Lately, Chris Franjola brings his flair for live performance to the stage when he heads to Laugh Boston on March 22. During his run on the hit series, Franjola created and impersonated a host of recurring characters, including his signature Justin Bieber impression.

Before Tig Notaro takes the stage to headline the Women in Comedy Festival at the Chevalier Theatre on April 21, don't miss her hilarious and heart-wrenching Amazon series One Mississippi. Loosely based on Notaro's life, the show tackles personal tragedy and real-world issues, all with her signature candor, such as in season two's fifth episode, "Can't Fight This Feeling," which received praise for its focus on sexual harassment in the workplace.

SPRING IN YOUR STEP

What to look for at five must-see performances that will keep you on your toes this spring. / Cathryn Haight

The Boston Ballet performs John Cranko's rendition of Romeo and Juliet from March 15 to April 8, bringing sword fights and passionate pas de deuxs to the Boston Opera House stage. Set to Sergei Prokofiev's score, Shakespeare's tale features new set pieces and costumes, including more than 189 outfits purchased from the Joffrey Ballet and refurbished by the company's costume shop.

Kelley Donovan & Daneers seek to emulate the emotions of those experiencing transition in their three contemporary works presented in Transitional State, coming to the Dance Complex on March 16-17. The show includes guest artist teXtmoVes' performance of Don't Break the Circle, a piece set to a spoken-word poem about Russian soldier Yevgenia Lazerevna in which the heroine reminds other female camp prisoners to stay united when captured by the Nazis in World War II.

ANIKAYA Dance Theater created Conference of the Birds from movement workshops and narratives collected from local Muslim, immigrant and refugee communities. Showing at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion on April 5-8, the world premiere includes 29-year-old Warsan Shire's poem Home and a World War II-era text from Edith Wharton to give the audience a sense of immigrants' reality both past and present.

The final concert of Jose Mateo's 32-year-tenure as director will feature the most-requested ballet from his repertoire of 80-plus works. Set to Franz Schubert's Quintet in C, Mateo's Schubert Adagio culminates in an intimate pas de deux, where the two dancers' bodies interact to form sculptural shapes. The piece will be accompanied by 1993 work House of Ballet and a world premiere when it's performed as part of Moving Violations at Cambridge's Sanctuary Theatre on April 6-29.

For a Celebrity Series appearance, acclaimed British choreographer Wayne McGregor presents Atomos, his tech-forward collaboration with London's Studio XO, at the Boch Shubert Theatre on May 4-5. The dancers will don an electronic skin that maps their biometrics and creates a visualization of their inner feelings.

with Ryan McNamara

Part of the ICA's Art in the Age of the Internet exhibition, MEƎM 4 Boston: A Story Ballet About the Internet is a high-energy, immersive performance inspired by internet-sourced choreography selected by the dancers, featuring moves from Trisha Brown and Janet Jackson alike. With digitally printed costumes and a soundtrack of current hits, Brooklyn-based visual artist Ryan McNamara premiered MEƎM in 2013, but he evolves the piece each time it's performed. We connected with McNamara before MEƎM's showing at the ICA on May 18-19. / Cathryn Haight

WHAT IS THE INSPIRATION BEHIND MEƎM? I was thinking about my interest in the live experience, which is really important to me. There's something amazing about the arts. It's a field that believes in people coming together to be in the same space. Also, being alive now and spending nearly half my day on the internet, and thinking about how those two worlds operated together in their similarities and their differences and what it would be to experience live performance in the same way.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR CHOREOGRAPHIC STYLE? I love watching a body do something that I can't do, but at the same time, I'm working with these dancers who are much more than what they can do. ... There's something about being able to have technique be important, but take a backseat to personality. I want the audience to basically get a crush on all the dancers.

DESPITE THE PIECE'S 2013 CREATION, THE INTERNET-BASED SUBJECT MATTER IS STILL RELEVANT. WHY DO YOU THINK THAT IS? What I find so interesting about it is that obviously this was an insane revolution in our culture, but I feel like we never took the time to really dissect what that means. It's not even questioned, and I think that's why shows like this are important because it affects so many aspects of our life. ... What is the thing that we're even talking about when we talk about the internet? Because it's not just the wires connecting the server. There are so many things involved in that cultural shift.

WHAT DO YOU HOPE THE AUDIENCE WILL TAKE AWAY FROM THE PERFORMANCE? A shift in perspective. As an audience member, that's what I want from a performance or any visual art show. It's showing me a different perspective—and not that I have to keep that shift—but it's sort of seeing something in a different way than when you entered. I think that's a pretty magical thing.

Q&A

with Kevin Monahan

Kevin Monahan has come a long way since being just a kid with a video store card and a penchant for grungy VHS tapes. Actually, not really. As artistic director of the Boston Underground Film Festival, Monahan selects which wonderfully weird films to screen for BUFF's audience of horror hounds and sci-fi fanatics. After studying film at UMass Amherst and volunteering at local festivals, Monahan was invited by BUFF founder David Kleiler to partake in his celebration of genre cinema in 2005. We caught up with Monahan before the 20th annual festival on March 21-25, which kicks off with Gus Krieger's My Name Is Myeisha. / Cathryn Haight

WHAT CRITERIA DO YOU HAVE DURING THE FILM-PICKING PROCESS? We're looking for stuff that's just strange and bizarre, off-the-beaten-path type of films that probably wouldn't have a wide release around here anytime soon. A lot of festivals relegate the type of films that we show to their late-night slots, and ours is an entire festival of midnight movies. There's something for everyone in the festival, but not everything is for everyone.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE THE BUFF EXPERIENCE? It's a roller coaster that's constantly smacking you against the sides of the car, giving you whiplash the whole time. We can show really heavy political content and then something really gross and stupid in the next slot. We'll have a party that goes really late Friday night, a midnight showing that goes until 2 am, then we expect you all to come here bright and early at 10 am in your pajamas. It can be erratic and hectic and also be as low-key as you want it to be.

IF YOU COULD WATCH ONE FILM FOR THE REST OF YOUR LIFE, WHAT WOULD IT BE? David Lynch's Blue Velvet. It's such a gorgeous and haunting film.

Highlighting the artistic perspectives of differently-abled people, the ReelAbilities Film Festival spans March 21-29 and opens with a must-see film, Sanctuary, at the Museum of Science. Directed by Len Collin, the Irish comedy follows the romantic adventures of a young disabled couple after a caretaker pulls them away from a group outing for a day alone.

The 17th annual Boston Turkish Film Festival rolls into the Museum of Fine Arts on March 22-April 8, boasting a collection of 21 films from both established and emerging Turkish filmmakers. This year's lineup includes a March 31 screening of Fatih Akin's 2017 Golden Globe winner In the Fade, focusing on a woman who seeks out the perpetrators responsible for the bombing that killed her son and husband.

Wicked Queer's 34th annual LGBT Film Festival runs March 29-April 8 and commences with A Moment in the Reeds, a Finnish drama about an encounter between a student and a Syrian refugee. One of the first queer feature-length films produced in Finland, the Mikko Makelo-directed work screens at the Museum of Fine Arts.

Q&A

with Lance Reenstierna and Tim Pilleri

Lance Reenstierna and Tim Pilleri—producers and co-hosts of the true crime podcasts Missing Maura Murray and Crawlspace—recently launched their newest series, Empty Frames. Exploring the unsolved 1990 Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum theft, the podcast dives deep into theories, potential leads and the ongoing drama surrounding the crime. We caught up with the duo to discuss their latest mystery. / Julia Aparicio

WHY DO YOU THINK THE GARDNER MUSEUM HEIST REMAINS RELEVANT?

Tim: It's an insane mystery that is still ongoing.

Lance: And of course, the empty frames are still there. It's always a reminder. ... And then the amount, the dollar sign that's on these stolen paintings is almost like a video game number. It's like $500 million. You might as well say a few zillion. It's so much money and no one's ever found them. No one's ever had a solid lead.

WHAT SETS EMPTY FRAMES APART FROM YOUR PAST PODCASTS?

Tim: It's a little bit lighter in subject matter because we've been dealing with missing people mostly. But we're also both from Boston, so it's something that really hits close to home.

Lance: It's a lot more personal I would say.

IF YOU COULD WALK OUT OF A MUSEUM WITH ONE PIECE OF ART, WHAT WOULD IT BE?

Lance: I've already thought about it. Tim and I went down to D.C., and they had a Vermeer and Dutch artists exhibition. We ended up walking through the museum and we saw Van Gogh's Self-Portroit—it's just stunning to see that. I didn't even take a picture of it because it felt wrong after seeing it up close.

Tim: That painting really spoke to me like it spoke to you as well. I really love The Storm on the Sea of Galilee, but I know it's not in a museum right now, so I guess my answer is the same as yours.

WHAT DO YOU HOPE THE AUDIENCE TAKES AWAY FROM THE PODCAST?

Tim: We hope that someone hears it and says, "Hey, I feel like I saw that painting in Uncle Joey's basement."

Lance: Also, people really should go to the museum. ...You hear about it all the time, but it doesn't really resonate until you're in there, until you take a trip to the museum and learn about it and you see what else is in there. So we hope to just kind of open up community and public awareness to this loss and where it came from.

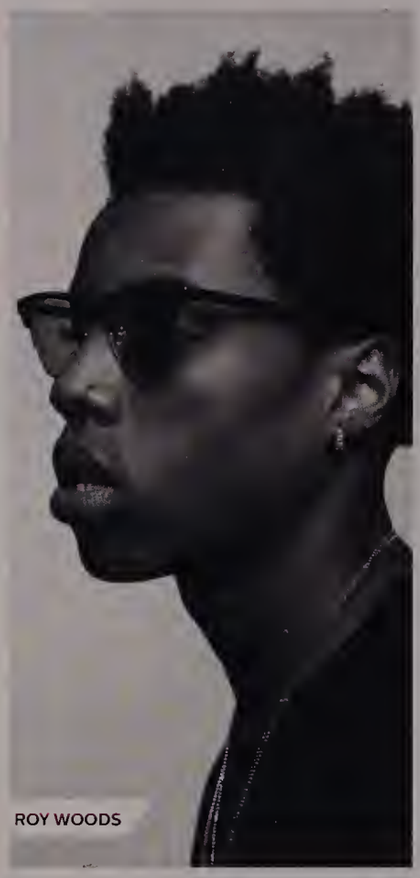
Before Maureen Dahill and Heather Foley bring the Caught Up universe to Laugh Boston on March 14, cue up "Episode 38: Holiday Hustle & Bustle," during which the longtime Southie residents cover everything from self-care to the humiliation of peeing in SPANX.

Exploring tales of the weird and unnerving, the horror fiction podcast NoSleep comes to Once Ballroom on March 15 with a live show based on the story "Feed the Pig," written by Elias Witherow and performed by Jesse Cornett, Peter Lewis and Erika Sanderson in season eight's "Holiday Hiatus #2" episode.



Brothers Hari and Ashok Kondabolu mix comedy with thoughtful commentary about the world and current events on their Untitled Kondabolu Project. Check out the first episode of the latest season for a primer on what to expect during their live taping at ImprovBoston on March 19, when they'll chat about everything from family tales to gentrification.

Before catching The West Wing Weekly at the Berklee Performance Center on April 21, be sure to listen to the episode recapping the political drama's season three finale, "Posse Comitatus." That live podcast from last year featured Aaron Sorkin and guest appearances by former West Wing cast members Allison Janney and Melissa Fitzgerald reviewing the TV episode that aired in 2002. It provides a good indication for the type of unexpected moments the audience can expect at this show from Hrishikesh Hirway and Joshua Malina, which will dive into the season four finale with director Thomas Schlamme.

CAN'T BE BEAT

Amid hundreds of concerts this season, a few stand out. Stream these tracks before you see the acts hit the stage. / Matt Martinelli

Jamison Ross gained fame with his Grammy-nominated debut album, Jamison, which was released in 2015 and features Jon Batiste on a few of the songs. The 30-year-old dropped his follow-up, All for One, this January and he stops at Scullers Jazz Club to play some beats off it on March 22. In the mix of covers and originals, keep your ear out for the rousing "Keep On," a song the drummer/singer co-wrote with Richard Lollar.

The secret is out on Marshmello. The costumed DJ was unmasked as Chris Comstock a few months ago, nearly two years after he shot to popularity with "Alone," which has more than 700 million views on YouTube. But now Marshmello will make you melt with his new single "FRIENDS," which stars Anne-Marie and has nearly 40 million views in less than a month. Watch the house party-set video before his April 4-6 stint at the House of Blues.

Bill Murray's musical career started as a joke decades ago on Saturday Night Live as a lounge singer. But after countless renditions of "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" at Wrigley Field, his dazzling turns on the piano in Groundhog Day and a jam session with Eric Clapton, he's giving it a go as a working musician. (We can only guess that movie career just didn't work out.) Last year he teamed up with Jan Vogler to release New Worlds, where he sings and reads classic American songs and literature. Before you check him out at the Orpheum Theatre on April 12, listen to his cover of Gershwin's "It Ain't Necessarily So" from Porgy and Bess.

Williams College grad Caitlin Canty drops her latest album, Motel Bouquet, on March 30 ahead of her Club Passim show on April 25. That gives you nearly four weeks to familiarize yourself with the new tracks from the Vermont native, whose songs tread the line between blues, folk and country. Canty's playing two sets at the Harvard Square spot, so check out some of previous standouts such as "Get Up" off her Reckless Skyline album.

You might recognize multihyphenate star Kate Nash from her turns on Netflix's GLOW or from her U.K. chart-topping singles such as "Foundations" or her 2013 Girl Talk album. The 30-year-old singer/songwriter/actress dropped her first single, "Drink About You," in February off her upcoming Yesterday Was Forever album. Drink up the sun-splashed video of the pop-rock single before Nash stops at Royale on April 25.

Roy Woods shot onto the music scene with a few early shoutouts from fellow Canadian Drake, and the singer's embarking on a tour for his debut album, Say Less, at the Middle East on April 26. The album mixes his tastes for R&B, reggae and funk with a little electronic influence, and the titular track showcases his introspective lyrics alongside his crooning voice.

Berklee College dropout Clay Cook has done pretty well for himself after ditching classes to team up with John Mayer to work on their band,

BILL MURRAY AND JAN VOGLER

Lo-Fi Masters. Cook eventually toured with his uncle in the Marshall Tucker Band and then joined the Zac Brown Band as the guitarist. He recently released Unobstructed View, but listen to "Restless Man" off his 2013 North Star solo album before you catch him at the Red Room at Cafe 939 on April 28.

Providence-based band the Low Anthem spent a decade building up its reputation only to see it all hang in the balance after an auto accident while touring for 2016's Eyeland. Amid a chaotic time and with some members of the band still recovering from the crash, Low Anthem's latest, The Salt Doll Went to Meaure the Depths of the Sea, was born out of a Buddhist fable. The indie-folk band recorded the minimalist album in its Providence studio, and with a dozen short songs, it's a quick listen before the group plays Brighton Music Hall on May 12.

Q&A

with Madeleine Peyroux

Singer/songwriter Madeleine Peyroux hits the road again this spring, but with a detour from her smoky, introspective vocals. Her latest album, tentatively titled Anthem, is due out this summer and includes 10 originals and three covers—including the titular remake of Leonard Cohen's song. We chatted with the former Boston resident before she kicks off her national tour at City Winery on April 25. / Matt Martinelli

IS THE ALBUM A DEPARTURE FROM YOUR PREVIOUS WORKS? It's a bit different in a few different ways. I have tried to do records that are mostly writing before and during those periods I was much more in my own head, and I think the songs showed that. It was almost intellectualizing things in order to show that the work had been done, that I had been thinking hard. I wanted people to think that I was giving them something deep. I kind of made the lyrics more obtuse than they needed to be, which sounds pretty critical. Even though I like those songs, I don't think that they were as accessible. I guess this record was meant to be more accessible. I've opened myself up to whatever with these songwriters. It was really a kind of collaborative effort, so that the songs don't actually have an identity that belongs to any of us at the end of the day. There's little bits and pieces from everybody, which I think is kind of cool. And the record does not take itself seriously, I hope, because I think that's a big part of it. There's some lightheartedness even though we're touching on some dark issues.

IN TERMS OF THE UPCOMING TOUR, DO YOU HAVE ANYTHING SPECIAL IN MIND FOR IT? We have all these new songs. It's also going to be a new group of people in the band because unfortunately the trio I've been working with, those guys are too busy. So I'm putting together a brand new show. I hope it has the humor I'm telling you about, and I guess the focus of the show will be to try to have a good time and get some laughs. It won't very much be a jazz show, so in that sense, it's sort of a departure from that approach.

ANYTHING SPECIAL THAT YOU LIKE ABOUT PERFORMING IN BOSTON? Boston is overwhelming to me. ... I lived in Dorchester for about six months, and I tried to go to Berklee College of Music for a while, and I think Boston is tougher than New York—and sometimes a little more racist and confrontational. I think the weather is probably part of it, but it's not the only thing I'm talking about. I think of Boston as being a little bit daunting. It's also got the best schools and the most intelligent people. It's a bit of an enigma to me. And for some reason, somebody doesn't like me in the newspapers. I keep getting bad reviews every time I play there in this one newspaper, The Globe. I kind of don't know what to think about Boston. I'll just keep trying as long as they'll have me. I'll do my best. I have a little bit of a twinge of uncertainty, when I think I have to play Boston. I'll try one more—I played there not too long ago. Wherever that was, it was a tiny place and it was actually quite empty, and I thought: This is it Boston. And I do remember before the show, thinking: This is the best I could possibly be. I have to have an amazing show tonight. I did all this mental preparation, probably for weeks, and then it was a half-empty room. Maybe it was a great show; I just don't know anymore. That's how life is, that's why it's so fun. It's a good thing we could just get in the car and then go to the next city.

Q&A with Diablo Cody

Ever since Alanis Morissette's blistering song "You Oughta Know" from Jagged Little Pill first hit the airwaves in 1995, music has never been the same. Now, the American Repertory Theater is gearing up to expand the scope of the iconic album with a world premiere musical adaptation, directed by Diane Paulus and with the book written by Academy Award-winning writer Diablo Cody. We chatted with Cody about what you oughta know before the musical's premiere on May 5 at the Loeb Drama Center. / Nathan Tavares

WHAT MADE YOU WANT TO WRITE A MUSICAL BASED ON THE ALBUM? The producers actually came to me with the idea. And so I'm very lucky in this regard because usually musicals languish in development hell for years. In my case, I had the producers come to me. They said, "Diane Paulus is attached to direct this," which was thrilling to me because she's the best. And when I heard a Jagged Little Pill musical—you know, it had never really occurred to me to write a musical before. I mean, I've never even worked in theater until now—at all. [Laughs.] So it was a terrifying idea, but I was like, "I'm willing to step out of my comfort zone for Alanis because I'm that big of a fan." And it just sounded like it would be fun. And it was.

WAS THERE A PLOT ALREADY FLESHED OUT? Not at all. No. That was the scary part. .. So I just listened to the album a lot, and I realized that even though Alanis has never explicitly called it a concept album, it felt like a concept album to me because so many of the songs are about this specific theme of living your life in denial and then opening your eyes, allowing yourself to experience the pain of acknowledging reality and then being better for it. It really is an album about making yourself uncomfortable and ultimately evolving because of that. That is the jagged little pill, so to speak.

IS THERE ONE SONG THAT YOU WERE REALLY EXCITED TO WORK ON? Oh yeah, "Ironic." I was so excited to tackle that song because people have debated the lyrics for years, and they've busted Alanis' chops about how it's not really irony. And the song itself just has such vivid lyrics that I remember that was the first one I tackled because I was like, "This is going to be a challenge, but this is also going to be a blast."

WHAT KIND OF NEW MATERIAL IS IN THE SHOW? NEW SONGS? There's new music, yes. I'm pretty sure I'm allowed to say that. And it's really something else.

CURTAIN CALLS

Here's a sneak peek of eight must-see productions this spring, with excerpts chosen by writers and directors. / Nathan Tavares

James Darrah directs Boston Lyric Opera's production of The Threepenny Opera, running March 16-25 at the Huntington Avenue Theatre. The satire is set in the slums of Victorian London and explores the corruption of capitalism after an infamous criminal nicknamed "Mack the Knife" secretly marries Polly Peachum, the daughter of the leader of London's beggars.

Polly: "But one night you'll hear 'em all yellin' down by the harbor. And you'll ask, 'Do they have to yell that way?' And you'll see me smile and rinse another glass out and you'll ask, 'What's made her smile today?' And a 50-gun galleon with its eight sails a-waving slips into the bay."

Director Scott Edmiston helms the production of Anna Christie, a drama about a daughter who reunites with her coal barge captain father and then falls for a shipwrecked sailor. The Eugene O'Neill classic drops anchor at the Lyric Stage Company on April 6-May 6.

Anna: "You can go to hell, both of you! You're just like all the rest of them. God, you'd think I was a piece of furniture. Sit down and let me talk for a minute. You might as well get cured this way as any other. First thing is, I want to tell you both something. You was going on as if one of you had got to own me. But nobody owns me—excepting myself."

Actors' Shakespeare Project tackles romance and marriage in Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing, directed by Christopher V. Edwards. Playing April 11-May 6 at the Multicultural Arts Center, the comedy stars sworn bachelor Benedick and the witty Beatrice who are tricked into smoothing over their rocky romantic past.

Benedick: "That a woman conceived me, I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her most humble thanks; but that I will have a recheat winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrick, all women shall pardon me.

THE THREEPENNY OPERA

Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the fine is, for the which I may go the finer, I will live a bachelor."

In collaboration with MIT, the Nora Theatre Company presents the world premiere of The Women Who Mapped the Stars by Boston playwright Joyce Van Dyke. Directed by Jessica Ernst, the play transports audiences to Harvard in the late 1800s, when five women ushered in major advances in astronomy but were paid half as much as their male co-workers. Get star-struck when the show runs April 19-May 20 at the Central Square Theater.
Antonia: "What if someone is being born right now, in the new century—a girl is born—and these things are not a dream for her—this will simply be life! Life as she lives it!"
Annie: "Growing up to become an astronomer—because she wants it..."

Tackling the unexpected humor in sperm donation and the challenges of being the husband of a gestational surrogate, 2 Sharp Quills presents Boston playwright Judith Strang-Waldau's Rockabye at the Mosesian Center for the Arts on May 18-19. The dramatic comedy examines both sides of the surrogacy process and explores the yearning of LGBTQ couples to become parents.
Karim: "My community turned its back on me when I finally told them I'm gay. For years I felt totally alone in the world. But Annie, I no longer have to hide. Luis and I fell in love. He was my first love and he will be my last. We want to share what we have with a child."

After snagging a Tony Award nomination in 2017 for her work directing Eclipsed on Broadway (which featured Oscar winner Lupita Nyong'o among the stellar cast), Liesl Tommy returns to the Huntington Theatre Company to direct Top Girls on April 20-May 20 at Huntington Avenue Theatre. Set in 1980s London during a dinner party with famous historical women as guests, the play explores what it takes for women to rise to the top of a male-dominated world.
Marlene: "Oh Joan, thank God, we can order. Do you know everyone? We were just talking about learning Latin and being clever girls. Joan way by way of an infant prodigy. Of course you were. What excited you when you were 10?"
Joan: "Because angels are without matter they are not individuals. Every angel is a species."
Marlene: "There you are."

Take it to the runway when Company One presents the drag-tacular Wig Out! at Oberon on April 27-May 13. Penned by Tarell Alvin McCraney, who co-wrote the 2016 Oscar winner Moonlight, this play whisks the audience to the early 2000s to experience the vibrant black drag ball culture in a catwalk showdown between two rivaling drag houses.
Rey-Rey: *"You tell Serena, mother of the house of Di'abolique, that we understand the terms of a Cinderella soirée and we will be there ready to walk and win all that is ours. I hope your mucked up melancholy face beams previews of our presence 'cause bitch after we come thru gone be some blind and dazzled punks left in the wake. So says the mother of the house of Light. Toast and toss for a good cause

GET ON BOARD AT Bully Boy Distillers' Cornhole for a Cure tournament. On March 22, the Roxbury distillery's floor transforms into an arena for cornhole slingin' and cocktail sippin' to champion a charitable cause—all proceeds from the event benefit Boston Marathon runner Inna Fedorova's fundraising on behalf of Tedy's Team. Those better at throwing back drinks can opt for mingling in the barrel room to try out a complimentary concoction, take a behind-the-scenes tour of the facility or join in on a prize-filled raffle. Toss one back and head to the Bully Boy Distillery on March 22. / Julia Aparicio

DEALER'S CHOICE

The White Card, presented by ArtsEmerson and the American Repertory Theater and directed by Diane Paulus, shatters the idea that racism only recently manifested again in the United States—a belief that ignores the minefield of racially charged encounters that black Americans negotiate every day. "The White Card is about a white family that invites a black artist to dinner because they're interested in her work," poet Claudia Rankine says of her world premiere drama, whose characters are forced to acknowledge their privilege. Stay in the room and have that conversation yourself when the play hits the Emerson Paramount Center through April 1 and, in the meantime, head to improper.com for a Q&A with Karen Pittman, the actress who stars as the up-and-coming visual artist Charlotte. / Nathan Tavares

THOROUGHBREDS ★★★

Playwright-turned-filmmaker Cory Finley made a number of good decisions in his debut as a writer/director. Not only is Thoroughbreds exceptionally well cast, but his choice to hire cellist and fellow New Yorker Erik Friedlander to provide an atonal music score to keep viewers off balance was an inspired idea that adds a great deal to the dramatic thriller's wildly unpredictable nature. Essentially a four-character chamber piece, Thoroughbreds stars Anya Taylor-Joy (The Witch) as Lily, a Connecticut teenager who's hiding her true nature behind a rich-girl exterior. When the picture opens, this chipper boarding school student is reconnecting with the cooly detached Amanda (Bates Motel's Olivia Cooke), her childhood best friend—initially because Amanda's mother has paid her to do so. Amanda's a hyper-intelligent sociopath, so there's really no need for Lily to tutor her, which is their excuse for getting together during afternoons that gradually stretch into evenings at the expansive mansion owned by Mark (House of Cards' Paul Sparks), Lily's oppressive stepfather. While they rebuild their relationship through brutally honest confessions, they bond over their mutual hatred of Mark. The story would seem familiar to viewers of Henri-Georges Clouzot's Diabolique and Sidney Lumet's adaptation of Equus, if it didn't continually surprise. Generously, Finley has dedicated this film to the late Anton Yelchin, who makes his final screen appearance as a small-time drug dealer struggling to escape the girls' toxic orbit. BLACK PANTHER ★★★ Before the release of 2008's Iron Man, the idea of an interconnected series of films spun out of the pages of comic books was a pipe dream held by middle-aged man-children who never quite outgrew superhero stories. A decade later, Disney's Marvel Studios has successfully launched 18 hit movies, sustaining these serialized action adventures by setting each film within a different genre. Take the three Captain America pictures: The First Avenger, a star-spangled, patriotic paean to the Greatest Generation's battle against fascism; The Winter Soldier, a contemporary action movie deeply indebted to the paranoid thrillers of the 1970s; and Civil War, the story of a fractured family torn apart in an ideological battle of brother against brother. Civil War also introduced T'Challa (Chadwick Boseman), king of the fictional African nation of Wakanda and the man behind the mask of the Black Panther. With T'Challa's first solo film, director and co-writer Ryan Coogler (Creed) borrows the spiritual aspects and Shakespearean aspirations of Disney's The Lion King, while paying homage to the adventures of suave super-spy James Bond. And although a strong cast of women (newcomer Letitia Wright, The Walking Dead's Danai Gurira, Oscar nominee Angela Bassett and Oscar winner Lupita Nyong'o) anchor the film, it's Creed star Michael B. Jordan who elevates it. His Killmonger is a fully fleshed-out villain whose motivation might even be justified. For a film that's been greeted as a defining moment for both cinema and black America, this is perhaps its greatest surprise of all. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Death Wish ★ If you're hankering for a fix of Bruce Willis starring as a hooded vigilante in Chicago, stick with Unbreakable, M. Night Shyamalan's 2000 thriller. As dour and ridiculous as that film was, at least it had the sense not to promote the Good Guys with Guns fallacy that's been debunked after the Parkland shooting. But then, there was probably never going to be a good time to release a remake of 1974's Death Wish. MGM obviously realized this when they quietly moved this bloody revenge picture directed by torture porn auteur Eli Roth (Hostel) from its original November release date to distance the movie from the Las Vegas shooting that claimed 58 lives. Even screenwriter Joe Carnahan has distanced himself from the film, which queasily reimagines Paul Kersey, the architect played by Charles Bronson in the original film and subsequent sequels, as a surgeon who decides to arm himself and start taking the lives of "scumbags" at night. This of course stands in stark contrast to his day job, where he's dedicated to saving whoever rolls into his emergency room. Alas, something snapped when the latest gunshot victims to turn up in the ER were his beloved wife (Elisabeth Shue) and their college-bound daughter (Camila Morrone). As in the previous picture—and the novel it's based on—this leaves Paul to hurtle toward his secret, homicidal hobby as "the Grim Reaper." And while Roth's film is slicker, what once passed as entertainment is now simply gross. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

A Fantastic Woman ★★★★ Chilean director Sebastián Lelio has an amazing way with actresses. His last film, Gloria, was punctuated by a glorious performance by Paulina García in the titular role, and she earned the Best Actress award at the Berlin International Film Festival for her efforts. Now, Lelio is back with a worthy follow-up, built around another intimate and empowering exploration of a woman finding herself. Only this time, that woman faces many more societal hurdles. Rather than overlooked for being middle-aged, the 20-something Marina Vidal is shunned for being a transgendered woman, a situation that's exacerbated when Orlando (Francisco Reyes), the waitress and talented singer's decades-older boyfriend, unexpectedly dies. The two had just embarked on a new phase in their relationship, as she'd recently moved into his apartment, a living arrangement that sat badly with both his ex-wife (Aline Küppenheim) and his grown son (Nicolás Saavedra). By the time Marina is shown a bit of kindness from Orlando's brother (Luis Gnecco), she's experienced so much pain and derision not only from his callous family, but also the doctors and police who treat her with suspicion. It's only when she visits her paternal voice coach (Sergio Hernández) that she's able to let loose, igniting the soundtrack with Geminiano Giacomelli's "Sposa son Disprezzata," an aria about a scorned wife. It's enough to make you excuse Lelio's use of Aretha Franklin's "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman" elsewhere in this life-affirming little film. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Game Night ★★★ It's a bit odd to see a fairly elaborate comic riff on The Game more than two decades after the lesser David Fincher effort was released, but the reverence that directors John Francis Daley and Jonathan Goldstein (co-writers of last summer's Spider-Man: Homecoming) display for not just that 1997 picture, but also a few of Fincher's other pictures they reference (including Fight Club and Gone Girl) play better than anticipated. Nods to some of the auteur's more showy techniques, such as a single-shot game of keep-away, are rather artfully staged—more than you can say for anything in the duo's previous directing effort, 2015's uneven Vacation reboot. Jason Bateman and Rachel McAdams star as Max and Annie, a couple whose marriage seems to be based on their compatibility as trivia and charades partners. Lucky for us, it turns out that they're equally well matched as comic foils—although sexually, they seem to be having some problems. A fertility expert thinks Max might be shooting blanks due to lifelong competitiveness with his older, more handsome and successful brother, Brooks (Kyle Chandler), who's always beaten him at everything. So when Brooks invites them to take part in an elaborate murder mystery party along with two other couples, Max and Annie jump at the chance to beat him at his own game. And naturally, when Brooks is kidnapped by real gunmen, no one bats an eye. If Hitchcock for Dummies sounds like a fun alternative to your own game night, you could do worse than roll the dice on this comedy. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Happy End ★★★1/2 Austrian filmmaker Michael Haneke follows up his Oscar-winning Amour with this nihilistic provocation that functions as a semi-sequel to the unbearably heartbreaking love story from 2012. Jean-Louis Trintignant, an elderly veteran of the French New Wave, once again appears as an octogenarian named Georges, and he's trying to convince someone—anyone—to end his life that dementia has begun to dismantle. It's cruel, but the 75-year-old filmmaker has never been an artist known for his warmth, despite the tenderness he displayed in his previous film. Haneke's latest piece of playful misanthropy doesn't simply function as a quasi-continuation of Amour, but also as a summation of his three-decade career. The elliptical, fragmentary storytelling style recalls 2000's Code Unknown, while the backdrop of the European refugee crisis echoes the colonialism at the core of 2005's Caché. Meanwhile, the video voyeurism of 1992's Benny's Video has been updated for the smartphone and social media age. He also keeps his focus on society's moral rot, beginning with the youngest characters, a la the proto-Nazis in 2009's The White Ribbon. Featuring Haneke's frequent muse Isabelle Huppert as Georges' daughter Anne (who not-so-coincidentally portrayed a character with the same name in Haneke's apocalyptic drama Time of the Wolf), she's but one root in a poisoned family tree. You may be laughing too hard during the film's final moments to notice how complicit we've become with the characters' apathy toward others. But as is usual with Haneke, the joke's on us. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Nostalgia ★★1/2 Not the subtlest of dramas, this new weepie from Mark Pellington (director of Arlington Road) boasts one hell of a cast. Start with John Ortiz as Daniel, an insurance appraiser who visits the apartment of recent widower Ronnie (Oscar nominee Bruce Dern), a hoarder with no interest in purging the items his memories are intrinsically tied up in, to the chagrin of his granddaughter Bethany (Amber Tamblyn). From there, Daniel travels to the burned-out shell of a home belonging to Helen (Oscar winner Ellen Burstyn), a widow who while fleeing the blaze wasn't able to grab more than a box of jewelry and the signed baseball that her late husband had long revered. Her married son Henry (Nick Offerman) offers to put her up, while encouraging her to start fresh at a retirement community. Attached to the ball solely because of how much it meant to the only man she ever loved, she does something her son never thought she would: travel to Las Vegas to get an appraisal from Will (Jon Hamm), a serious collector of sports memorabilia. It's at this point that the film—which features a verbose script by indie darling Alex Ross Perry (writer/director of Listen Up Philip)—begins to really click, partially because of the delightful chemistry between Burstyn and Hamm, and also due to the believable dynamic between Hamm and Oscar nominee Catherine Keener, who plays Will's sister Donna in the heartrending scenes that close out the film. If you can get past the treacly music score, you might just find an honest look at the past, filtered through the present. (At Boston Common.)

Oh Lucy! ★★★ Based on her short film of the same name, Atsuko Hirayanagi's Tokyo- and San Diego-set Oh Lucy! briefly recalls Wong Kar-wai's Chungking Express, what with the blond hair sported by both movies' Asian female leads and the allusions to California Dreamin'. And while Hirayanagi lacks the bleeding cool style that Wong had already developed by the time of his third feature's release, this is a promising debut for her. Shinobu Terajima stars as Setsuko, a chain-smoking, emotionally unfulfilled office worker who's never forgiven her haughty sister Ayako (Kaho Minami) for stealing the man she loved. Single, middle-aged and bitter, Setsuko enrolls in an English class after being manipulated by her niece, Mika (Shioli Kutsuna), Ayako's flighty daughter. It's here that she meets John (Josh Hartnett), her unorthodox teacher in the "school" that appears to be little more than a front for a low-level gangster. John's idea of teaching involves extended hugs and role-playing, so soon Setsuko's donning a wig and calling herself "Lucy," the better to please her handsome American instructor. But when he suddenly quits and flees to the States with Mika, Setsuko's alter ego takes over and Lucy and Ayako follow them to southern California. Quirky? Sure. But the film's also true to its characters and their dark emotional histories, which Hirayanagi doesn't shy away from exploring. It's also rich with humor, which isn't terribly surprising once you discover Will Ferrell is one of the picture's producers. (In English and Japanese with English subtitles. At Kendall Square.)

The Party ★★★ Sally Potter's new pitch-black comedy will no doubt remind you of 1966's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf, with its shadowy black-and-white cinematography and an unforgettably dyspeptic look at disintegrating relationships. But it will help to approach the 68-year-old, British writer/director's latest armed with the knowledge that it's not quite the masterpiece to match Mike Nichols' adaptation of Edward Albee's play. But then, at 71 mercifully fleet minutes, you might not mind. As couples begin to gather at the home of Janet (Kristin Scott Thomas) and Bill (Timothy Spall) to celebrate Janet's political ascension within the British government, her distracted husband has his own announcement to make. Ah, but not before Martha (Cherry Jones) and her longtime partner Jinny (Emily Mortimer) have their own dramatic news to share. In fact, drama will become the theme of the evening, especially once Janet's acid-tongued best friend April (Patricia Clarkson) arrives, willing to cut down anyone or anything—particularly her aromatherapist boyfriend, Gottfried (Bruno Ganz), from whom she repeatedly announces her separation, in case anyone missed it the third or fourth time. The only person to arrive solo is Tom, one half of a popular power couple, who seems to need the alone time, given the frequency with which he visits the bathroom to snort coke. And did I mention the gun that appears in the opening scene? I'll leave it to you to discover if Chekhov's old rule applies in the buildup to the movie's delicious final shot. (At Kendall Square.)

Red Sparrow ★★ In today's society, it's hard to overlook the amount of physical, sexual and emotional violence perpetrated against women in this adaptation of Jason Matthews' Edgar Award-winning spy novel. Early in the film, the wonderfully named Dominika Egorova (Jennifer Lawrence, who really should know better), a prima ballerina with the Bolshoi Ballet, has her career cut short when her dance partner (Sergei Polunin) "accidentally" breaks her leg during a performance. In order to continue providing shelter and medical care for her sick mother (Joely Richardson), she's forced to attend "whore school," where she's taught to "inure yourself to what you find repellent." That lesson comes from the headmistress, played by Charlotte Rampling—one of the only performers who seems to be aware of how trashy this material is—who also teaches Dominika to weaponize the body she's repeatedly told belongs to the state. I guess that's supposed to excuse the assaults and rapes she endures. But then, Dominika also fights against the patriarchy by bludgeoning her former partner and the dancer (Nicole O'Neill) he conspired with to replace her, while director Francis Lawrence (no relation) hovers over their naked, battered bodies. After starring in Mother! and now this picture of ill-repute, Jennifer Lawrence's reported break from her movie career couldn't come at a more needed time. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

WHO'S THAT GIRL? Berklee alum Betty Who is bebopping back to her old haunts in celebration of her new single and her recent freedom as an independent artist. The self-assured Australian pop star signed with RCA in 2013, eventually synth-popping her way through MTV award shows, stadium tours with Katy Perry and two studio albums. Her last RCA album, The Valley, dropped last year, swaying from pop euphoria to introspection, with standout songs including rebound anthem "You Can Cry Tomorrow" and the synth-driven cover of the Donna Lewis track "I Love You Always Forever." But the 26-year-old is writing herself a new chapter—and her catchy "Ignore Me" single that released in January is the start of it. Head to Who's self-proclaimed favorite venue in the country, Paradise Rock Club, on March 15, and then catch her encore at Brighton Music Hall on March 16. / Hannah McKennett

Edited by Julia Aparicio

BEE ROLL Panopticon Gallery is unearthing its spring exhibit, In the Garden, with photographs that highlight a range of gardening activities, from harvesting produce to planting perennials. Eight budding artists make up the crop, including Beth Dow, who focuses on the formal serenity of gardens, and Joshua White, whose series of pigmented prints flaunts the gentle nature of fledgling vegetation. Boston-based photographer Christine Collins cultivates alternative inspiration with her untitled series about New England's backyard beekeepers who garden with a purpose. Buzz by In the Garden through April 30. / Brynne Crawley

OSTRA offers contemporary Mediterranean cuisine in Boston's Back Bay

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

GLAM SLAM

The fabulosity quotient approached critical levels when Dress for Success hosted Style + Soul, a fashion presentation and cocktail party, at the Ritz-Carlton. (Full disclosure: We're not just saying that because yours truly was one of the models.)

Among the others strutting their stuff on the catwalk to help women transitioning into the workforce were such powerhouses as radio sirens Kennedy Elsey and Lauren Beckham Falcone, broadcasting babes Shayna Seymour and Heather Unruh, designer Erin Robertson, Miss Massachusetts Allissa Latham, the incandescent Luz Vargas, pharma bigwig Bev Walters, B-Mag glamazon Abby Bielagus and booze ambassador Anna McLaughlin, who were dressed to the nines by the style gurus at Bloomingdale's in Chestnut Hill.

The ballroom was decked out like an Italian disco, with white leather love seats and lucite chairs, and the runway was lined with countless white roses, which made one guest say, "I feel like we're on an episode of The Bachelor."

On hand for the spectacle: board chair Jacqui Budd, Boston's answer to Iris Apfel, Doris Yaffe, forever first lady Angela Menino and her daughter, Susan Fenton, Back Bay beauty Julie Hume Gordon, effervescent It-girl Ashley Bernon, the incomparable Sabra Katz, fashionista Pramy Yadav, designer Christian Restrepo, the deliciously dangerous Laura Baldini, wonder woman Kenlyn Jones, the suspiciously tanned Rob Caro, fashion fairy godfather David Josef and his handsome other half, Danny Forrester, dress peddler Matt Dunphy, Nantucket party pair David Handy and Donald Dallaire, force of nature Michelle O'Neill, lovable shutterbug Cheryl Richards, jeweler to the stars Jennifer Kinsman, style avatar Janaial Robinson, Gallic funboy Eric Jausseran, bespectacled hottie Bill Neidlinger, ballerina foodie Rachel Cossar and her main man, Max Osbon, blond bombshell Kristen Daley, bubbly brunette Allyce Najimy, Beacon Hill beauty Jessica Ferri Schmitz, smoldering photographer Eric Levin and the gorgeous Lindsay Ahern, New York publicist Jack Yeaton, and one man who said, "At my company, we call the Bristol Lounge at the Four Seasons 'Conference Room B.'"

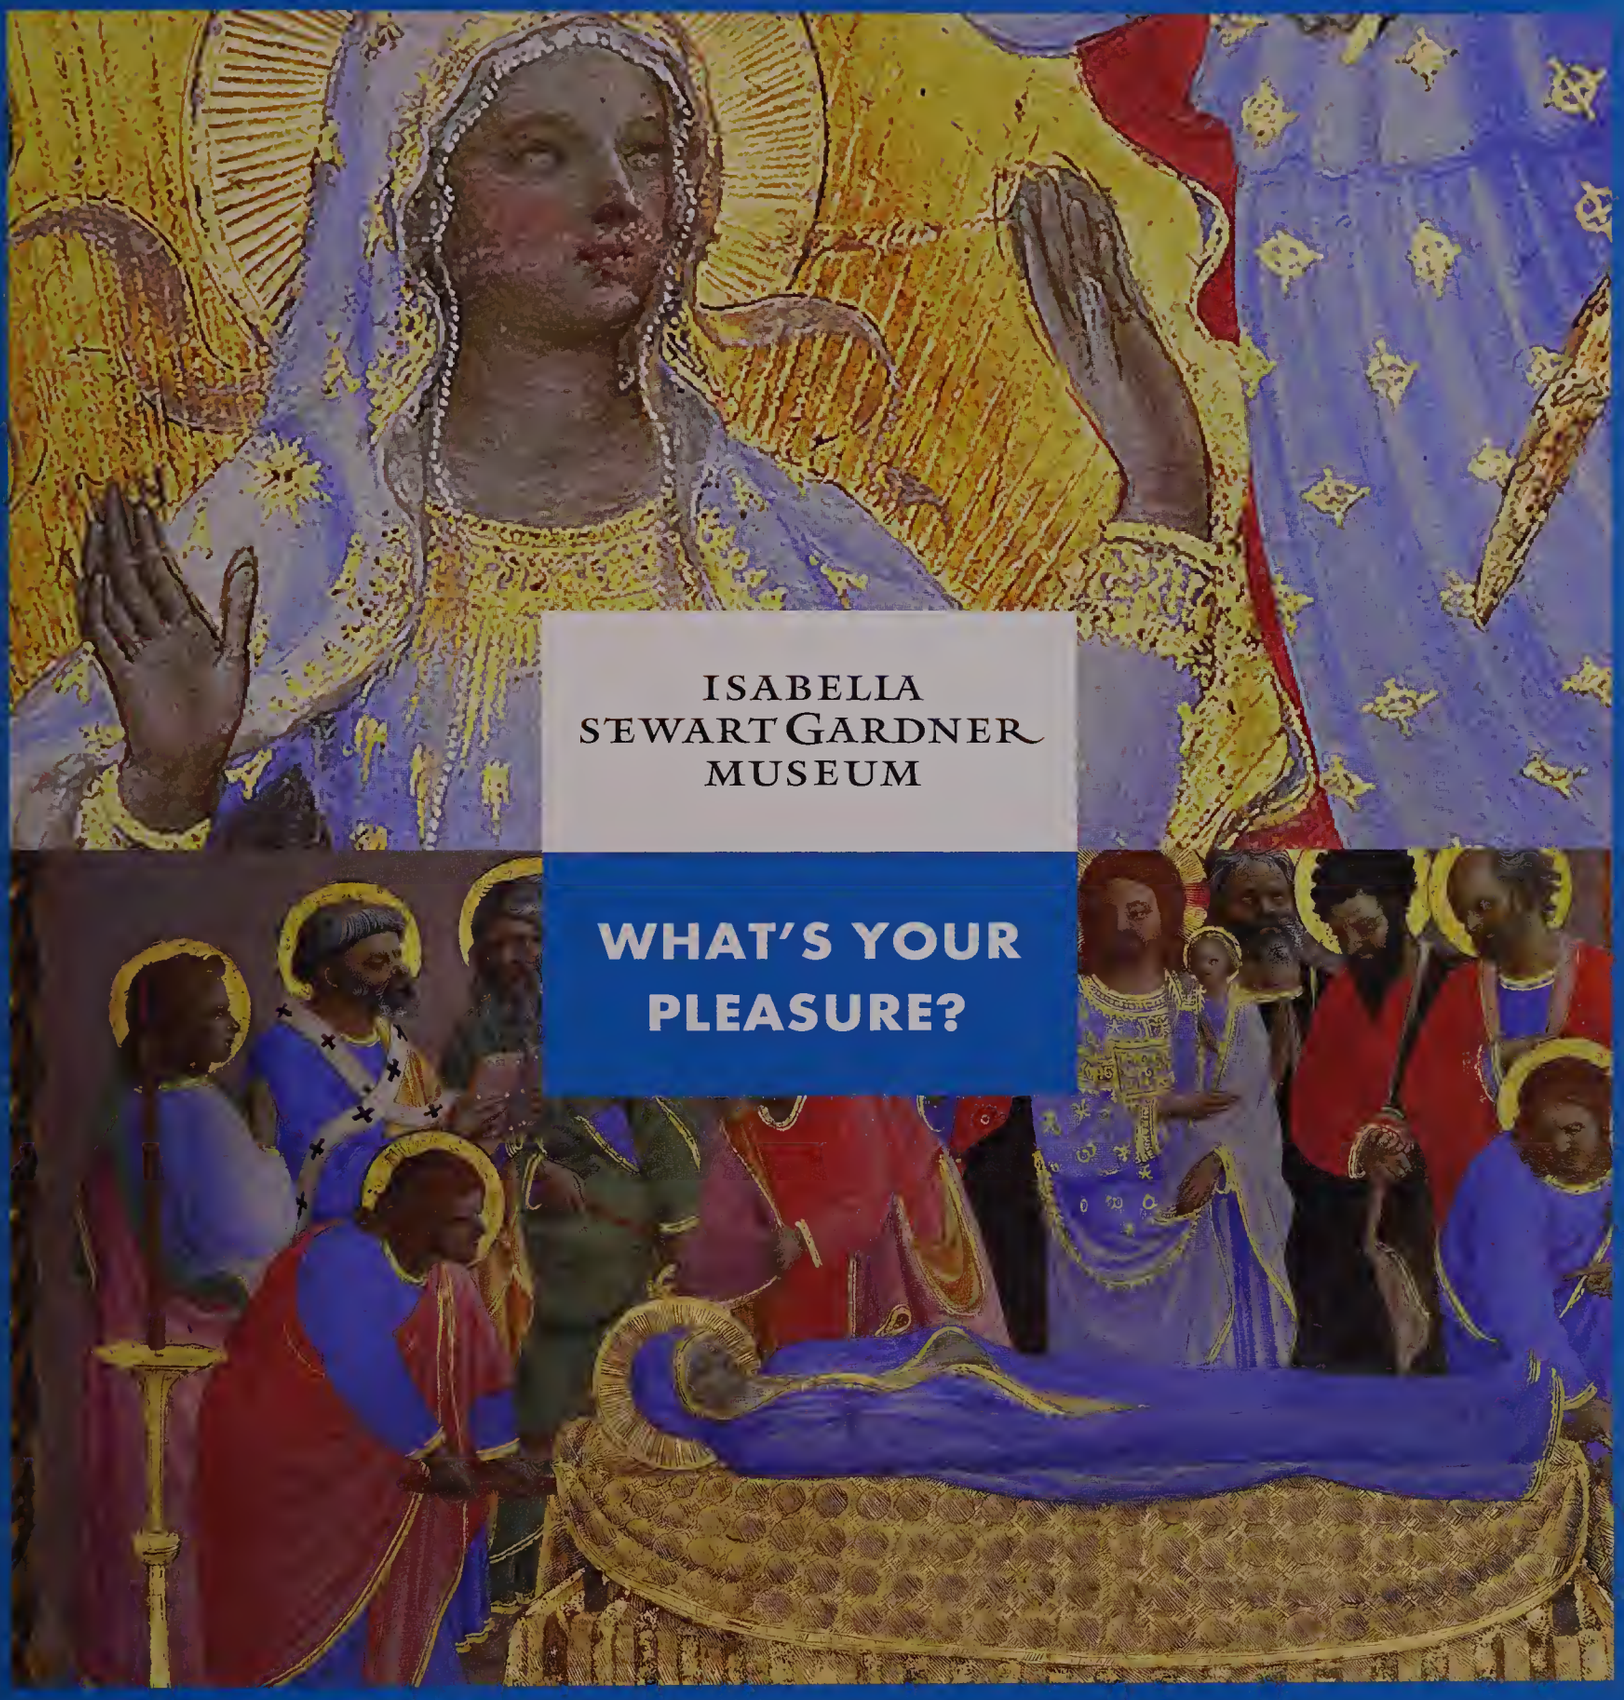
However, the evening's funniest exchange: "Are you over your bronchitis?"

"I am. And the best part is that all those antibiotics finally got rid of the syphilis."

BRRRRRR

What's wet and cold and lasts for about five seconds?

The Plunge for Elodie to end epidemolysis bullosa. A genetic disorder that afflicts the adorable Elodie Kubik, it spurred her parents, Dave and Emily, to tap into their truly solid group of friends to take a midwinter, early morning dip in Wellesley's Morses Pond (in the middle of a nor'easter, no less) to raise money for the under-the-radar disease. Shots of Fireball helped stiffen resolve, while the subzero temperatures helped stiffen nipples and caused seasonal shrinkage among the brave men sporting Speedos.



Present and accounted for: construction mogul Mike Fish and his better half, Liz, the criminally blue-eyed Dave Khtkian and the incomparable Kristan Fletcher, blond beauty Jane Cullinan, dashing iconoclast Andrew Wanliss-Orlebar with the swanlike Julia, statuesque beauty Kristin Jonash and the dashing Ben, and several brave and shivering others who threw themselves into the icy water. They all emerged mostly unscathed, although one person's pair of U.S. Divers goggles were shattered by the cold—and one notorious germophobe was convinced that she'd contracted a flesh-eating bacteria.

Regardless, everyone enjoyed a tasty brunch afterward, and the group raised more than $125,000 for a good cause, while the woman who said, "I forgot to shave my legs," had little to worry about, given the brevity of the situation.

As for the fact that swimming in Morses Pond is not allowed midwinter? One of the group said, "Oh, well. This wouldn't be the first time this crew's been arrested by the Wellesley police." ◆

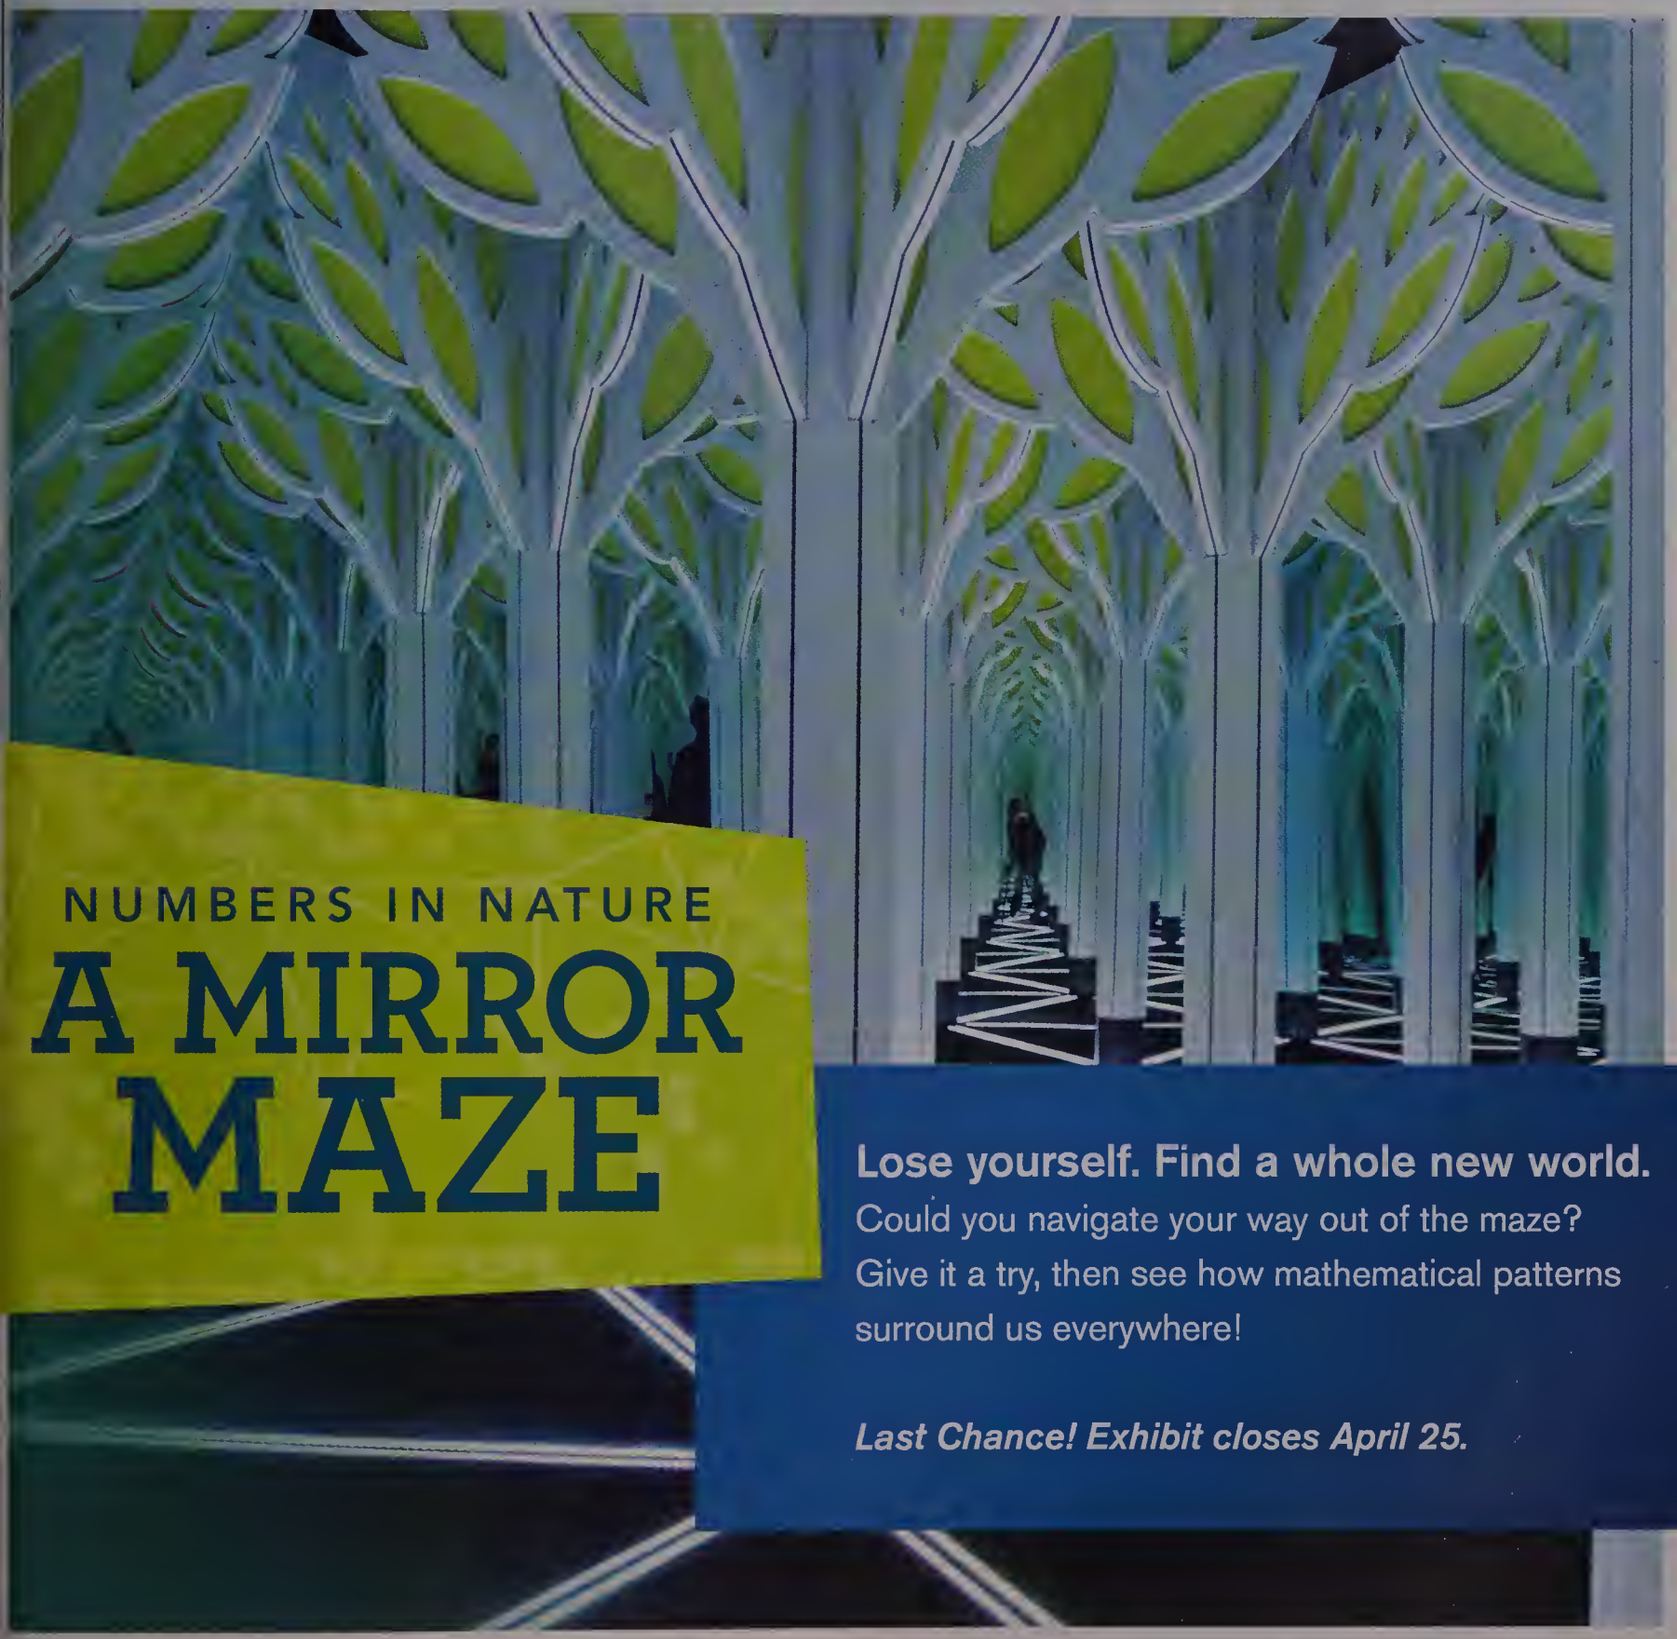
A NEW INNING



I HAVE NEVER SEEN ANYTHING IN sports like Pedro Martinez circa 1999-2000. While offense was up around the league, the 5-foot-11-inch pitcher was dominant at keeping hitters in check. Every time he took the mound, there was a chance he might strikeout 20 guys or pitch a perfect game. It wasn't just appointment TV, it was appointment get-thee-to-the-park to watch in person. I still remember as a teenager taking a break from my summer job cutting grass at a cemetery, resting up against a tombstone, pulling out my clunky cellphone and dialing up the Red Sox ticket office at 8:59 am to see how many day-of-game tickets I could score to a Pedro start later that evening. You couldn't miss a chance to see history. So as you might guess, I usually shoot down any comparisons to the mighty Pedro. But it was easy to get caught up in them last season when Chris Sale seemingly struck out every batter he faced and electrified the fan base more than any pitcher since... Pedro.

Our cover subject for this Red Sox issue, Sale dishes on his offseason, including a trip to hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico that bonded the team and left an indelible impression on the Florida native. He's only one of the keys to the team's hopes to go deeper in the postseason this year as our Ezra Dyer details in his annual preview. Elsewhere in the issue, it's not baseball season if Michael Felger isn't playing devil's advocate in his role as Boston's pre-eminent sports radio loudmouth. Jonathan Soroff chats up Felger and his wife, Boston 25's Sara Underwood, on the secret to their success. And the Sox roster isn't the only part of Fenway to get an upgrade, as Pierce Boston recently opened in the neighborhood. In our inaugural Design & Development column, Scott Kearnan gets the deets on the 30-story tower and the changing streets around Fenway Park. Maybe next up can be a 30-story monument of Pedro?

TALL TALE

PIERCE BOSTON ADDS AN ICONIC PIECE TO THE RAPIDLY CHANGING FENWAY

DESIGN & DEVELOPMENT

Fenway's Big Swing

The magical year of 2004 changed so much about Fenway—and not just an end to 86 years of Red Sox-related misery. It's also the year that zoning restrictions along Fenway's Boylston Street began to be lifted, allowing for a string of taller buildings to pop up. Goodbye, Burger King and D'Angelo. Hello, new apartments, condos—and even a Target.

The latest building to open its doors, Pierce Boston sits at the triangular intersection of Boylston and Brookline Streets and offers as much of an iconic welcome to the neighborhood as the nearly 90-year-old Landmark Center. Samuels & Associates is the development company behind the proposed 14-story expansion of Landmark and the construction of Pierce. It's also the same team that created the 576-unit Triangle Trilogy luxury apartment building and the Verb Hotel, both down the street.

But the area's development isn't solely from Samuels. The Red Sox are reportedly looking to build on six parcels near the park, along Lansdowne and Ipswich Streets as well as the building that currently houses Tony C's Sports Bar & Grill. Also in the works is a proposed 184-room hotel where a gas station currently sits at 1241 Boylston St. as well as the mammoth Fenway Center project that recently began its first phase near Yawkey Station.

"Once a week, I'll overhear someone on the street telling their friend how much the neighborhood has changed," says Joel Sklar, president of Samuels & Associates. "It's my favorite thing." / Scott Kearnan

A CLOSER LOOK

The sharply angled, 30-story Pierce Boston looks different from every angle. At one sidewalk vantage point, it almost resembles a massive box cutter—appropriate, because as the first wave of residents unpacks this month inside its 109 condos and 240 rental apartments, the Pierce is moving a new approach to luxury living into one of the Hub's most rapidly evolving areas.

The building is the first Boston property designed by the international architecture firm Arquitectonica, whose portfolio includes the Bronx Museum of Art and Microsoft's European headquarters. According to Joel Sklar, the Pierce has the same dimensions as the Flatiron Building in New York, though Arquitectonica's glimmering glass curtain walls and more dramatic design put a twist on a traditional triangle shape.

"When you think of the skyline of Boston, it sort of ends at Back Bay," Sklar says. "We're adding to the skyline of Boston in a new way."

The inside marries the perks and aesthetics of traditional high-end style with flourishes of millennial-chic whimsy (like a pinball-equipped, retro-inspired arcade game room). Units range from regal one, two and three-bedroom spreads with three sides of floor-to-ceiling windows—standing at a vertex brings on blissful vertigo.

Outdoor design elements start at the street-level plaza, anchored by concrete sculptures from contemporary artist Alexandre da Cunha, and stretch to the sky-scraping Levity Lounge, a sleek marble-swathed sanctuary with a rooftop pool that practically peers into Fenway Park. This is also where you'll find a handful of sky cabanas, where condo owners can entertain al fresco.

The classically stylish condos occupy the 10 highest floors and boast quartz countertops, glass tile-lined showers and wide plank floors of European oak. Studio options take a more modern approach. Think lemon-yellow accents in hallways covered with abstract designs inspired by topographical maps of the Fenway.

"We really wanted to build on connections between the inside and the outside," says Lois Goodell, director of interior design at CBT, the West End-based firm behind the Pierce's posh interior, who says the nearby Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum was an inspiration for its art-filled indoor/outdoor spaces.

GREEN TEAM: Juicygreens will offer more than simply fresh-pressed juices.

JUICE BEAT IT

A JUICE JOINT COMES TO JAMAICA PLAIN

JUICYGREENS CAFE
57 South St., Boston
juicygreensboston.com

HUSBAND-AND-WIFE TEAM MIKE and Ammy Lowney are bringing their love of clean eating to Jamaica Plain as they prepare to open Juicygreens Cafe in April. Mike, a practicing physician in Hyde Park, and Ammy, a former Boston Public School teacher, noticed a lack of nutritious dining options in both of their respective fields and tapped their backgrounds to create a line of fresh-pressed juices that they are now expanding to a brick-and-mortar location that goes far beyond just juice.

"Going to medical school, there wasn't a lot of nutrition in my curriculum," Mike says. "I did a lot of education on nutrition on my own and I realized that a lot of the medical conditions that I was treating in primary care could be helped and aided by mainly just diet and what we put in our bodies."

Juicygreens will serve breakfast, lunch and dinner with special brunch items on weekends. The menu includes cold-pressed juices such as the Daily Fix made with beets, red apple, ginger and lemon as well as bowls like the Hearty Quinoa Bowl made with organic quinoa, beets, roasted sweet potatoes and Brussels sprouts, spicy pumpkin seeds, pickled onions and a choice of housemade dressings. Other menu sections will focus on immune-boosting juice shots, sweet and savory toasts and acai and pitaya bowls. The brunch menu will include vegan and gluten-free options such as waffles served with vegan butter and fresh fruit, and a housemade breakfast cookie to accompany an array of coffee drinks made with beans from local roasters.

"We're going to try to make it so that every option in that space, no matter what you choose, is something that is going to put nutrition into your body," Mike says. "Our mission is to make sure that we're doing something that is going to be positive and going to enrich people's bodies, minds and spirits."

Ammy drew inspiration from juice bars in California and New York when designing the 20-seat interior, located in part of the space previously occupied by the old Harvest Co-op. Utilizing natural light, the duo decorated the cafe with Spanish tiles, greenery and lots of wood to make it feel "like walking onto a porch or deck," Ammy says. The space even includes a kids' corner with miniature tables and chairs—and outdoor benches for the warmer weather.

"We put a lot of our energy and our love into it," Mike says. "We're trying to bring an oasis to Boston that people can go to and enjoy what they're eating and feel good about it."

Good Eats: Plantain Yourself

For Micole Rivera Suárez, the new chef de cuisine at the Ritz-Carlton's Avery Bar and Artisan Bistro, the menu of small bites is her chance to showcase both new dishes and ones close to her heart, such as the tostones with garlic butter and cilantro-lime aioli ($9), crisp-edged disks of goodness that remind the chef of her native Puerto Rico. Peeled unripe plantains are soaked overnight and then fried twice before they're tossed in garlic-infused olive oil that's seasoned with sea salt and black pepper. "This flavor is home to me," Rivera Suárez says. "We grew up eating this. It is the perfect buttery, salty, slightly crispy bite. I know nothing else that has this flavor." / Nathan Tavares

MALBEC'S CALL

Argentinian malbec continues to rock the market. What's remarkable is how quickly the category has evolved from semigeneric (when every label read "Mendoza") to specific subdistricts that impart their own terroir impressions on the wines. While soils may be different, they're all at ultra-high elevations, and the vines benefit from direct sunshine and cool windy conditions, which build intense flavor and great structure into the grapes. These three are delicious springtime choices for the grill or barbecue. / Sandy Block

TRIVENTO GOLDEN RESERVE MALBEC, LUJÁN DE CUYO, 2015
This is a ripe, muscular style from a region that's emerged as Argentina's quality leader, if you prefer richness and intensity in your red wine. Owned by over-the-Andes neighbor Concha y Toro, this impressive malbec has a plum jam, cocoa-like, dark fruit intensity, with medium tannins and outstanding concentration. Lush in texture with a charming berry character, this would perfectly complement barbecued ribs.
$23, Roche Bros. Boston

ZUCCARDI SERIE A MALBEC, VALLE DE UCO, 2016
Zuccardi is a winemaker that rarely misses the mark. This terrific bargain is produced from sun-drenched but very high-altitude vineyards, which experience wide daily temperature fluctuations, ensuring ripeness and balance. It's got a complex aroma of violet, ripe berries, coffee and smoke that's mellow and silky on the palate. This bottle can take a slight chill and is juicy enough to work with grilled burgers or tacos.
$14, Whole Foods at Ink Block, Boston

VIÑA COBOS BRAMARE MALBEC, LUJÁN DE CUYO, 2014
Just like his California wines, this Paul Hobbs' project is unerringly delicious. Its powerful flavors are layered and bold, with leafy blueberry aromas, dark coffee/mocha-like fruit and substantial yet velvety tannins. This vintage is a bit earthier than in the past, with depth and length in the finish. If there's a malbec to drink now—but also consider aging—this is it. Pair this with grilled lamb chops. $45, Federal Wine & Spirits, Boston

VALIANT EFFORT

Val Chmerkovskiy has been dancing into hearts across America for years on ABC's Dancing with the Stars—twirling with the likes of Olympian Laurie Hernandez and recent Improper cover girl Victoria Arlen. Now with multiple tours and the March release of his memoir, I'll Never Chonge My Nome, under his belt, Chmerkovskiy steps out with fellow DWTS pros brother Maks and sister-in-law Peta for their Confidential tour, featuring an hour-and-a-half of choreography inspired by the trio's family life. We took it from the top with the ballroom babe before he swings into the Boch Wang Theatre on April 6. / Cothryn Hoight

WHAT'S THE DYNAMIC LIKE DANCING WITH YOUR FAMILY? It's awesome. People define happiness as combining work with a passion. I redefined that for myself in terms of the true blissful happiness when you are able to combine work with your passions and do it with the people that you love. That doesn t just go for my family in terms of Maks and Peta—also the cast, which 95 percent is the same from the first show. They're incredibly talented; they're some of the best dancers in the industry. Every stagehand, every production element, every person that's involved in the show is family People in the audience will feel like they become part of this family as well because that camaraderie resonates and it feels so good and it amplifies the performance and the entire experience. I think that's our biggest strength in the show, that you feel that love on stage and off stage and that's what I'm most proud of.

IS THERE A PIECE IN THE SHOW YOU ARE PARTICULARLY EXCITED ABOUT? I'm excited for literally every single piece. Every dance means something to me. It's not a job, you know? I'm speaking from the heart, I'm performing from the heart, and anything that comes from the heart is going to feel good. I'm excited to watch my brother perform a couple of his personal pieces that reflect his chaotic entrance into fatherhood. We have this awesome piece that involves strollers and babies and a lot of comedy.

IF YOU WERE A STYLE OF DANCE, WHICH WOULD YOU BE? The Argentine tango. There's a subtle strength to it. It's not loud, but it's really powerful. It's very intimate, very strong, but it's soft at the same time.

NEWER VINTAGE

With Himmel Hospitality Group taking over Bistro du Midi, master sommelier Brahm Callahan of Grill 23 is making his mark on the wine program. His Grill 23 team was a James Beard semifinalist and won a Wine Spectator award last year. Expect a bistro-like wine list with picks like a 2014 Rully from Domaine A&P de Villaine ($84)—one of Brahm's early additions.

TJ CONNELLY

TJ CONNELLY		JOSH KANTOR
In 2013, we turned Drake's "Started From The Bottom" into a playoff anthem—all fond memories with that track. More recently, I enjoyed the crowd's response to Tom Petty's "Won't Back Down" at the end of last season. Anything that gets people up, singing or both.	Best song to get the crowd going?	Anything people can sing along to—basic melodies, easy-to-remember lyrics, up-tempo grooves, celebratory themes and cross-generational appeal are helpful. "Tequila" by the Champs is one that checks off a lot of those boxes.
I have no idea why he chose it, but Hanley Ramirez was walking up to A-Ha's "Take on Me" at the end of last season and it was fantastic.	Favorite walk-up song for a current Sox player?	I'm usually too busy learning fans' song requests to pay close enough attention to all the Red Sox walk-ups that TJ is playing.
Afrika Bambaata and the Soulsonic Force's "Looking for the Perfect Beat," the opening is a perfect walk-up—the subject matter being a perfect match is a happy coincidence.	If you had a walk-up song, what would it be and why?	Curtis Mayfield's "Move on Up" and/or Aram Khachaturian's "Sabre Dance." I find it impossible not to feel happy and motivated when I hear either of those. And it would be really fun to work up good organ versions of them.
I can unequivocally say my favorite performer of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" is none other than our own Josh Kantor.	Favorite performance of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game?"	Of the 1,200-plus times I've played it, maybe the most memorable one was when I followed it with the Dead Boys' "Sonic Reducer" and a punk rocker in the stands immediately sent me a marriage proposal via social media, which I politely declined.
I learned how to be a stadium DJ on the job in my first 3-4 years, so I'm sure there's a few I can't recall. I do remember playing Warren Zevon's "Lawyers, Guns and Money" in a pregame once without realizing the fourth verse contains something of a self-fulfilling prophecy.	Biggest blunder you've ever made during a game?	Several years ago, a visiting infielder appeared to catch a pop-up for the final out of a Red Sox defeat. The ballpark's AV producer told me to play something to mark the end of the game. Neither of us noticed that the infielder had bobbled the ball and dropped it and that the game was therefore not yet over. I think I was playing Lead Belly's "Goodnight, Irene" when the umpire signaled for the next batter to come up.

UPGRADE

RELATIVELY SPEAKING

Age is just a number according to Relativity Whiskey. "Whiskey is a category of spirit that is constrained by tradition," spokesman Sam Karachi says. "Aging is very important, but it's also not necessarily the end-all, be-all." The product made its debut on Cambridge shelves in December after a year of work with Cincinnati's Brain Brew lab on proprietary technology that can mimic the changing of the seasons through temperature and pressure. Karachi explains that in a barrel, "You're trying to put the whiskey into the wood. The process we're using is putting the wood into the whiskey." In a matter of 40 minutes, traditionally aged whiskey—up to one-year-old—can transform into a few bottles' worth of a comparable 18-year-old spirit, with nutty notes of pecan pie and marzipan, some vanilla fudge and caramel butterscotch sweetness, plus a bit of black pepper and nutmeg spice. You'll find the batch number on each Erlenmeyer flask, which you can test out at Atwood's Tavern or pick up at the Fort Point Market ($40) and other spots throughout the city. / Sarah Hagman

WHISKEY BUSINESS

A year after launching its Fenway Park Tully Tavern, Tullamore D.E.W. introduced a Red Sox collector's edition in March, marking two years of partnership as the team's official whiskey. Get your hands on the Green Monster- and logo-wrapped bottle at spots like Gary's Liquors and Gordon's Fine Wines and Liquors ($25-$29).

OUT OF FOCUS

A PSYCHIATRIST MAKES THE CASE FOR INATTENTION

Tinker Dabble Doodle Try* by Srini Pillay
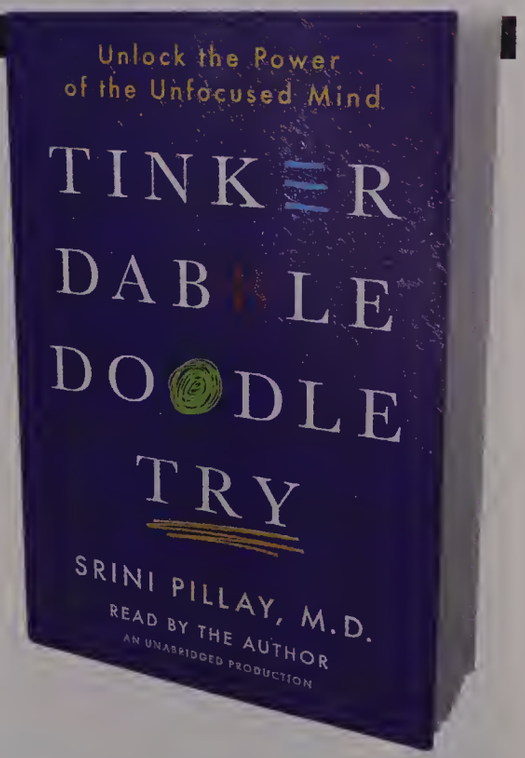
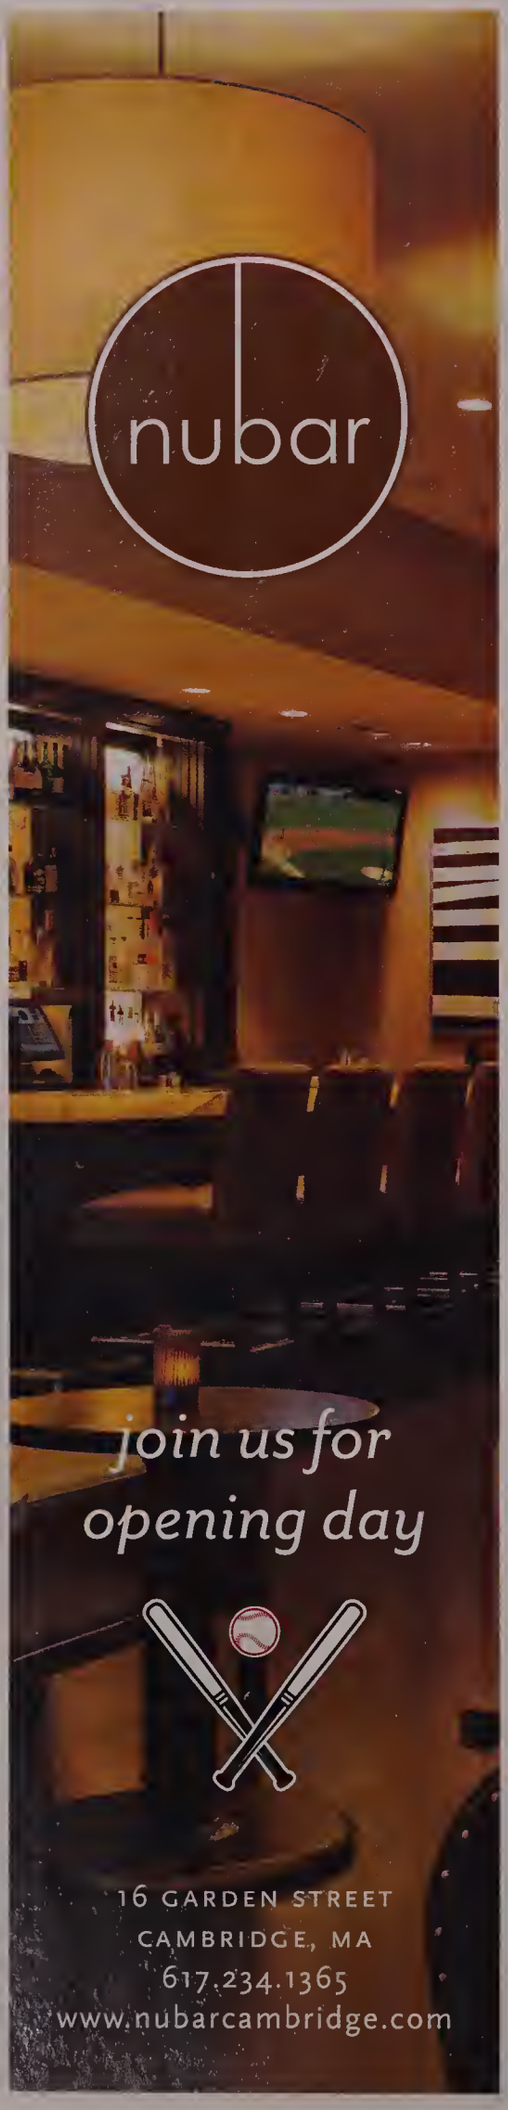
Published by Ballantine Books, 205 pages, $28

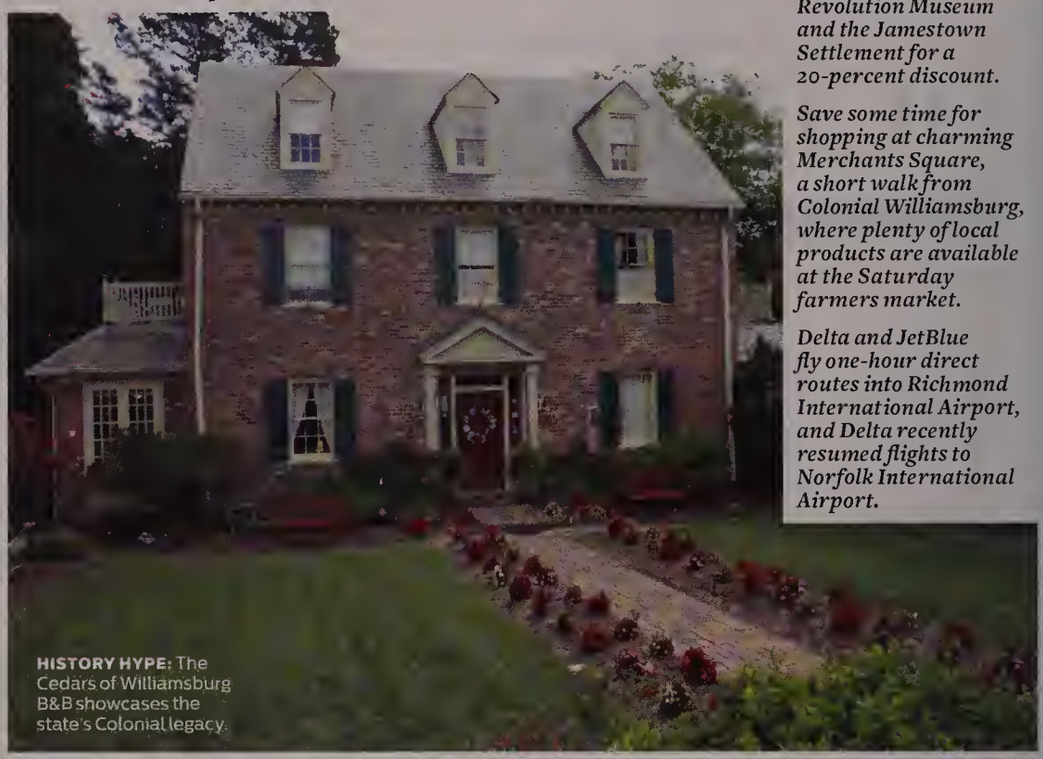


FOCUS IS OBVIOUSLY NECESSARY—IT'S THE shiny fork we purposefully stab into our thoughts and activities. But is inattention as deserving of its bad rap? Psychiatrist and researcher Srini Pillay details a refreshing upside to what he calls "unfocus" in his latest book, Tinker Dabble Doodle Try.

This term is the dreamy stretchiness of thought that arrives when we take a break, allowing in the looser intuitions of the unconscious. It's from this receptive mindset that Pillay, a Newton resident and part-time assistant professor at Harvard Medical School, says many famous discoveries have come along. He tells the story of biochemist Kary Banks Mullis, whose drifty-consciousness insight while driving a car led to the making of synthetic DNA.



Using published research to back up his theories, Pillay's suggestions for self-improvement echo the book's title: Experiment loosely through tinkering, (like Thomas Edison fooling with various materials to make the light bulb), dabble with work or hobbies outside one's profession (Steve Jobs had many interests before Apple) and draw to tap into other creative brain frequencies.



The scientific term for unfocus is "Default Mode Network," although it actually consumes great energy in the brain and is responsible for creative arts, daydreaming, inventions and romance. In Pillay's vision, AD would signify not the ominous-sounding "Attention Deficit" but rather "Attune Differently." So, let yourself go.

FROM PAGE 57: "Dreams allow you to imagine the unimaginable. Just before articulating his theory of relativity, Albert Einstein famously dreamed that he was sledding down a steep mountainside so fast that he approached the speed of light. He also dreamed that time was circular, and that it stood still so that lovers held on to each other for an eternity. When ideas like this come together, there is obviously no focused process. Instead, in dreams, the unfocused brain has the full license to roam around and collect ideas at will." ◆

MEET VIRGINIA

TRAVEL BACK IN TIME TO MASSACHUSETTS' COLONIAL COUSIN

MASSACHUSETTS LIKES TO LAY claim to the first Thanksgiving and hearty Pilgrims who persevered through mighty winters and religious intolerance. But what Bay Staters often don't mention are the settlers who were here 13 years before, having endured a months-long transatlantic crossing to settle on the shores of Jamestown, Virginia. Today, travel is a lot less arduous—just an hourlong flight from Boston to Richmond—and a lot more fortuitous.

Much easier than a horse and buggy, history geeks can grab a rental car to explore a trifecta of options within a 20-minute drive: America's Historic Triangle of Jamestown, Yorktown and Williamsburg. Though you won't have yet learned the intricacies of the pivotal role the French played in the British surrender, it's worth snagging some Gallic fun and fare at Blue Talon Bistro, where Cambridge's own Julia Child is played on loop at the wine bar. Or admire the view of the open kitchen, which churns out Nicoise salad, French onion gratinee and escargot as well as juicy burgers for groups of jovial William & Mary students—the campus is just a few blocks away. Everyone is delighted by the never-ending chocolate mousse, which arrives with a two-man team to hold the bowl and scoop out pockets of fluffy delight until the recipient says stop.

Centuries ago, sarsaparilla was used as a detoxifier, and for those who may have had a spoon too much of dessert, the Spa of Colonial Williamsburg beckons. Try the herb mixed with espresso for a mud treatment to remove impurities in the skin, or opt for a massage with an orange and ginger scrub, ingredients often used by sailors to improve digestion. A selection of herbal teas that pay homage to each century of Virginia's heritage is available all day should you want to laze about the steam rooms, whirlpools or showers.

Freshen up at the Cedars of Williamsburg B&B, where an immersion in the state's Colonial legacy comes courtesy of former teacher-cum-innkeeper Alex Vlk. Ever wonder where the slogan "Virginia is for lovers" comes from? He's got the answer: It was part of a campaign that was once touted as "Virginia is for history lovers." There are plenty of tributes to his favorite subject in every corner of the 11-room Georgian brick home and its adjoining cottage: quarters named after George and Martha Washington; Thomas Jefferson; and John Rolfe, the settler who married Pocahontas and was also the founding father of Virginia's tobacco crop.

The historical references continue at Fat Canary restaurant, named after the ships that sailed from the Old World to the New and stopped at the Canary Islands for supplies—especially wine. While a meal is an extraordinary fine-dining experience, the prices can be, too; those on a budget can check out the adjoining cheese shop and its charcuterie and spirits for a more wallet-friendly picnic.

You'll need sustenance after spending the morning at nearby Colonial Williamsburg, the living-history museum that recreates 18th-century life. Watching parents pull out their iPhones to take pictures of their children in traditional garb is one of the few breaks in the spell where horses and carriage traverse Duke of Gloucester Street, home to 40 shops and period homes. Be sure to keep track of the time for Saturday's rousing fife-and-drum march before exploring the American Revolution Museum at Yorktown, which opened last year. Enjoy the immersive theater transporting visitors to the Siege of Yorktown with smoke and cannon fire, read about the "Shot Heard 'Round the World" or try some shots of a different sort afterward with beer shooter flights at the Virginia Beer Company. A Saturday afternoon there includes everyone from babies to grandparents, enjoying board games and gathering around the picnic tables to enjoy food truck fare or the house menu's Chesapeake bounty of crabcakes, crab nachos, crab ceviche and more.

Those seeking something a bit more elevated than pub grub—and a bit of quiet, too—can head to Waypoint Seafood & Grill for specialty cocktails and locally sourced food from German chef Hans Schadler, who puts a bit of a German spin on regional favorites, creating can't-miss dishes such as the veal schnitzel and oyster stew with Virginia ham.

You likely won't wake up hungry, but the rousing smells of leek quiche served with a side of bacon from Cedars chef Hailey Morris on Sunday mornings are enough motivation to fuel up for the day. Visit Jamestown Settlement on a full stomach since it's easy to spend several hours immersed in the re-creation of North America's first English colony before bidding the region adieu with a toast and tour at Williamsburg Winery. Forty acres of vineyards yield merlot, chardonnay and viognier grapes, to name but a few; the vintages are surprisingly stellar for those unfamiliar with American production outside of big-name Napa and Sonoma, and it's worth bringing home a bottle or two to enjoy later. ◆

AWESOME BLOSSOM

BLOSSOM BAR PACKS MIND-BENDING FLAVORS INTO BOTH FOOD AND DRINK

Cocktail nerds in Boston are familiar with Ran Duan's compelling two-generational family story. He taught himself bartending at his parents' pair of Sichuan Garden restaurants, then vaulted to international fame and awards on the strength of his classic Tiki-inspired original cocktails. Having already added two gorgeous destination craft-cocktail bars (Baldwin Bar and Baldwin & Sons Trading Co.) to his folks' second restaurant in Woburn, he just remodeled their Brookline Village original. The new Blossom Bar at Sichuan Garden likewise centers on elegant, exotic drinks and traditional Sichuan fare.

Duan's specialty cocktails feature craft and classic Tiki hallmarks like high-quality spirits, fresh juices and spice syrups, careful choices of garnishes and ice shape/size, and an emphasis on tropical flavors, here leaning South American. Thus, the Angie Valencia ($13) combines aguardiente (the Colombian anise-scented cane spirit) with grapefruity amaro Aperol and citrus over coarsely crushed ice garnished with mint and papaya. It's weird and bracing and lovely. The Big Sur ($13) blends vodka, Licor 43 (a vanilla-fragrant, herbal Spanish cordial), lemon and pureed cupuaçu, an Amazonian fruit that tastes like chocolate and pineapple, yielding another complex, sweetish fascinator. The Broken Spanish ($14) blends tequila, avocado, coconut, lime and Thai basil into a trippy riff on a piña colada; that salty/crunchy/nutty coating on the rim is crushed chapulines (Google that). The Girl from Ipanema ($14) shakes up cachaça, crème de menthe, vanilla, passionfruit puree, lemon and egg white into a pretty, foamy confection, like a fruity Brazilian riff on a pisco sour. This is brilliantly conceived and executed bartending from both Duan and his lieutenants.

The team also deftly handles orders from the Tiki canon like Jet Pilots and mai tais (albeit without the kitschy ceramic mugs), as well as classics like Negronis and martinis. There's a 10-deep list of wines ($9-$13/glass, $36-$52/bottle), and a half-dozen beers running from usefully neutral lagers like Tsingtao ($5) to richer novelties like Maui Coconut Porter ($9).

Blossom Bar's menu distills the greatest hits of the original Sichuan Garden's traditional Sichuan fare and adds a few American-Chinese cliches for the less adventurous. Dan dan noodles ($7.50) with minced pork and spinach swim in an oily, pungent vinaigrette-tinged crimson with searing dried chilies (discard these, as they've already imparted their heat and flavor) and the strangely numbing-cold heat of Sichuan peppercorns: hair-raising in its ferocity. A similar mala (chili/Sichuan pepper) accent underscored with copious garlic, ginger and a subtle sweetness heightens the pleasure of slightly chewy pork dumplings with chili vinaigrette ($7.50). Sweet and pungent ribs ($11) provide useful contrast with a generous pile of tender, bite-sized chunks of bone-in pork in a salty/sweet glaze. Cool but not cooling is cucumber with garlic sauce ($9), julienned cukes and a lot of crushed peanuts with more garlic and mala intensity in the oily dressing. A stuffed tofu-skin crepe ($10.50) bulging with shiitake mushroom and bamboo shoots offers another sizable, mild respite from the fire-breathing courses.

Duck gets showcased brilliantly in a pair of entrees, starting with Chengdu duck stew ($31), half a tea-smoked duck hacked into pieces and served in a luscious mahogany broth scented with five-spice powder. Shredded duck with spring ginger ($23), peppers and onions delivers the smoked-duck fat-bomb joy without the bones. Back on the hot-hot-heat tip, Chong qing dry hot chicken ($17) yields fried-chicken crunchiness without a lot of batter, plus another pounding mala blast. A different, milder chili heat and flavor is conjured out of shredded beef ($17) with fresh green cayenne peppers in a soy garlic oil sauce. Wok-roasted shrimp and scallops ($25) appears on a lot of tables, boasting beautifully fresh shellfish if not the most amazing fry job, and it could use more salt. Ma paul tofu ($14), the stewy mix of soft-tofu cubes, minced pork and scallions, throws another bloody mala punch; you'll need some white rice ($1.50/$3) for relief.

Vegetable dishes include pea pod stems ($12.50) that are actually green bean leaves, a quality off-season substitution with a judicious load of garlic, and eggplant with spicy garlic sauce ($14.50), tender Japanese eggplant and green peppers in garlic and soy with just a dash of capsaicin fire. If the intensity of traditional Sichuan flavors isn't your bag, there are American-Chinese standbys like nicely browned, thick-wrappered pan-seared pork dumplings ($8) and hoary old dishes we didn't sample such as crab Rangoon ($9), General Tso chicken ($16) and beef & broccoli ($18). The room is newly done up in high mid-Mod style, with plain solid woods and mint green walls. The task-juggling staff (tonight's maître'd is tomorrow's bartender, etc.) is smooth, affable and enthusiastic.

Much as I enjoy the originality and deliciousness of Duan's cocktails, and followed the staff's exhortations to pair them with the consistently excellent Sichuan fare, I'm not entirely sold on boozy beverages—however complex and finely wrought—with dinner. I'm still likelier to enjoy those outlandish, slightly sweet, beguiling concoctions by themselves first and then switch to refreshing Asian beers with food. Whichever way you go, Blossom Bar at Sichuan Garden winningly combines ancient immigrant traditions and fresh local ideas into memorably insistent flavors. Between your glass and your plate, it's practically the American dream. ◆

Q: MY HAIR IS THINNING ON THE TOP OF MY HEAD. I HAVE HEARD ABOUT PRP TREATMENTS TO RESTORE HAIR; DOES THAT WORK?

A: Yes, PRP is an excellent and safe treatment to stimulate follicles to regrow hair. PRP, Platelet Rich Plasma, has shown to be very effective for hair restoration in many men and women.

Here's how it works: a small sample of your blood is drawn and then spun in a special centrifuge. The blood separates into two layers: red and yellow. The yellow layer is the PRP. The PRP is then injected into your scalp in the areas where your hair is thinning.

This PRP plasma contains growth factors, which help to re-activate the hair follicles, resulting in new growth and thicker hair. Several initial treatments are necessary, and then periodic maintenance.

EMBRACING AN UNCONVENTIONAL CAMERA, SODERBERGH AVOIDS PHONING IT IN

Midway through Steven Soderbergh's latest film—the prolific filmmaker's second after returning from a self-imposed retirement in 2013—there's an unexpected cameo by a notable actor who's worked with the director more than a half-dozen times. During this pivotal flashback, this Major Hollywood Star plays a Boston security consultant who tells the film's heroine, Sawyer Valentini (Claire Foy), to "think of your cellphone as your enemy." Certainly, that's good advice for a woman who goes so far as to uproot from Beantown, leaving her friends and family behind to make a fresh start in Pennsylvania after two years of being terrorized by a stalker.

But for Soderbergh—who seems wholly re-energized based on this experimental "social thriller" and his first post-retirement picture, Logan Lucky—his smartphone is his best friend, at least on this project.

Unsane, Soderbergh's down-and-dirty, low-budget production, was photographed almost entirely (save for some aerial drone shots) with three iPhones. And while it sounds like a gimmick, this decision lends an in-your-face immediacy to the picture, whose cold, ugly images feel like they've been captured by a fly-on-the-wall.

Of course, this voyeuristic approach is not entirely new for the director, who launched his career nearly three decades ago with Sex, Lies, and Videotape, a movie that helped put the Sundance Film Festival on the map. But what's almost unheard of in this era of blockbuster filmmaking and ballooning budgets is that Unsane ended up costing almost exactly the same to produce as that 1989 drama. That's why Soderbergh likes to joke that his entire camera department for this film fits into a backpack.

Beyond the technical aspects, however, the horrific goings-on are anchored by an unleashed performance from Foy, an actress best known for displaying regal restraint in her role as Queen Elizabeth II on Netflix's The Crown. Although intellectually acute, Sawyer's still emotionally unbalanced from her recent trauma, which leads her to be duped into unwittingly committing herself for 24 hours of psychiatric evaluation at the Highland Creek Behavioral Center after she consults with a staff therapist.

Soderbergh likes to joke that his entire camera department for this film fits into a backpack.

Locked inside close quarters with a group of previously committed patients such as unstable firebrand Violet (Juno Temple) and recovering opioid addict Nate (Jay Pharoah), Sawyer erupts into terror once she catches sight of a familiar face. Convinced that staff member George Shaw (Joshua Leonard) is actually David Strine, the stalker she moved more than 300 miles to escape from, she violently lashes out, which results in an extension of her involuntary stay.

The script by writing partners Jonathan Bernstein and James Greer gradually paints Sawyer as an unreliable protagonist—not unlike Jack Nicholson's R.P. McMurphy in Milos Forman's One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest—leaving us to wonder whether she's actually being held against her will, trapped in a facility with a worker who's a danger to her and others, or if she's suffering from psychosis. Unfortunately, Bernstein and Greer tip their hand a bit too early, which dilutes the impact of the film's final act.

Despite this, Soderbergh has a grand time staging the tale in exquisitely framed, personal space-invading close-ups and claustrophobia-inducing angles that are easily facilitated by the small size of his unconventional choice of camera. Rather than looking cheap, the iPhone-lensed images capture a certain queasiness, as though you're witnessing something that you shouldn't.

The film also benefits from the presence of Amy Irving, an actress who's no stranger to thrillers, appearing in Brian De Palma's Carrie (1976) and The Fury (1978) early in her career. Now, 18 years after acting in Soderbergh's Oscar-winning Traffic, she reunites with him to play Angela Valentini, Sawyer's concerned mother, who rushes to her daughter's aid when the troubled girl can reach her with, yes, a cellphone.

Just have the courtesy to leave yours turned off as you sit in your seat, focusing not on the little screen in your pocket but on the big one before you, as Soderbergh masterfully adds another genre to his resume. And although the multiplex crowd will be titillated with tense chills, art house fans will be happy to know that the filmmaker hasn't forgotten them, either. Beneath the film's puzzle, he slyly examines the lengths to which institutions might go to make a profit—and that might just be the most chilling aspect of all. ◆

NEW EVOLUTIONS

BRITISH POP STAR PULLS ABOUT-FACE WITH HIS LOOK AND MUSIC

JAMES BAY RELISHES CARRYING A BLANK sheet of paper and a pen or pencil wherever he goes, recalling his former idea to pursue painting in college. And when a moment of inspiration seizes him, it's usually to sketch someone's portrait.

"Even when I read, it's tales of people and relationships and human emotions that resonate the most, so when I draw and paint, it's people," the London-based singer/guitarist says. "I'm sitting at home, looking at a print I have of Toulouse Lautrec, of a couple kissing in bed. It's something about the light and the way that they're holding each other that I find infinitely more inspiring than a bowl of fruit."

Bay examines human dynamics much the same way as a songwriter—and surely wouldn't have the same breakthrough success if he was crooning about grapes.

The British soul-pop rocker burst onto the scene with the emotive surge of "Hold Back the River," from the 2015 album Chaos and the Calm, a study in earnest relationship songs that spawned three Grammy nominations, including Best New Artist. Bay's about to drop his May 18 follow-up Electric Light behind two advance singles that he recently performed on Saturday Night Live.

But the James Bay that viewers saw and heard on SNL was decidedly different from the singer with the long hair and wide-brimmed hat they were used to. The fedora was gone, the trademark locks swapped for a stylish coif. And the music provided its own update in the Strokes-like new wave of "Pink Lemonade" and the sparse, swooning "Wild Love," one of the first songs he penned for the new album.

"I listened to [that song] and I knew in the same moment, 'This is not music for the guy in the hat with the long hair,' " says Bay, 27, who follows his sold-out April 5 date at Royale with a Sept. 26 show at Blue Hills Bank Pavilion. " 'This is music for a new character; this is music for a next chapter, a new evolution.' "

Indeed, if his debut was inspired by Bruce Springsteen, Kings of Leon and Ryan Adams, Bay cites longtime musical loves like David Bowie, Prince and Michael Jackson, as well as more recent discoveries LCD Soundsystem, Frank Ocean, Lorde and Chance the Rapper for influencing the new album. "I want to crush it all together," he says, "and just enjoy the juices."

The singer began writing the new material on guitar as usual, then built them up with co-writer/producer Jon Green, reflecting a new interest in synthesizers and programmed drums. "I wanted to stack up vocals in a big, brash way," Bay adds.

"This is music for a new character; this is music for a next chapter, a new evolution."

When they were finished, a record-company rep passed along a copy to producer Paul Epworth (Adele, Florence + the Machine), who reached out to Bay with an offer to add some ideas. "He just brought an extra bit of fairy dust that he sprinkled across the music," Bay says.

Lyrically, his songs still tug heartstrings around love and loss, though he cites unity as a dominant new theme. "We're all still here on the planet but we're a little bit divided," Bay says. "As difficult as times can be, being together is important."

In turn, opposite to the tale of a hedonistic pop star playing the field, "Wild Love" echoes the singer's feelings about returning home to his longtime girlfriend after touring. "I'm reminiscing about that first time you see that person who's so important to you still and the explosive, sort of euphoric feeling that comes bursting out from within and how you experience that again and again."

Bay and his girlfriend both grew up in the small town of Hitchin, an hour north of London. It's the kind of place where one wouldn't expect a fan to upload a video to YouTube that's spotted by record executives. Yet that happened to Bay, whose college studies—for guitar rather than painting—also paid off. "I felt like maybe I'd find my way into being some sort of session player," he recalls. "I think that's arguably even harder than what I've managed." ◆

FURRY FAULTS

EXAMINING WHAT HAPPENS WHEN SLEEPING DOGS LIE

TIME FOR A DOG UPDATE. I SAY DOG BECAUSE our puppy, Gary, morphed into a gangly adolescent, seemingly overnight. He also morphed from a border collie into something else—at 5 months old, he seems to have the legs of a full-grown Great Dane and the body of a husky. He's like a furry pygmy giraffe. I hope he grows out of it. I mean, we all had our awkward phase, but I wasn't really looking for a sled dog who can clean my gutters.

Whatever he is, though, he's well-trained. Or at least, better trained than any other dog we've ever had. And that's because we recruited a police officer named Robert to instill some discipline in the wild Gary. The first thing Robert taught us is that basically everything we've ever done with our dogs was wrong.

For instance, if our dogs barked outside, I'd let them in so they'd stop barking. Wrong. "When you do that, you're teaching the dog that he gets what he wants when he barks," Robert said. The correct thing to do is to wait until he stops barking, and then let him in. You wait until the dog shows good behavior and then you give a reward. This requires a certain amount of Zen in the face of outrageous canine freakouts.

I've never been good at that. Our older dog, a basset-lab named Dino, flips out when he knows he's going for a walk. So I try to attach the leash as quickly as possible and get him out the door while a fusillade of bark-propelled breath-bombs curl the hair off my head and he squirms around in unbearable anticipation of this glorious, unbelievable adventure that's about to unfold. Which is to say, walking out the driveway and peeing on our mailbox.

Per Robert's instructions, I tried waiting for Dino to stop barking before putting on the leash, but it turns out that he just never stops barking. He's like the doped-up Lance Armstrong of barking, his stamina absolute. So I just wrestle the leash onto his collar and get on with it. Dino's 10 years old, so I think we missed the window on obedience training. And with him, that window was probably June 6, 2009, at 1-3 pm.

Gary, though, is a blank slate, not yet ruined by our complacency. Perhaps you know a dog or two who goes bonkers at the sound of a doorbell? Well, not Gary. Within about two hours, Robert trained Gary to go sit on his bed in the corner of the living room when the doorbell rings. "Place, Gary," we'll say, and Gary will race over and perch on the edge of his bed, clearly dying to go see who's at the door but determined to follow the rules. Meanwhile, Dino observes Gary go to his bed and get rewarded with snacks, thus prompting him to reach the logical conclusion: I should stand here by the door, barking at 120 decibels. Somebody has to.

Gary, despite his youth, is clearly the brains of this operation. Which is why it was so strange when he started pooping in the house overnight. Both dogs sleep in the living room because Dino's snoring is only slightly less loud than his barking. Gary, having seemingly mastered housebreaking, stays out there with him. But one morning we discovered cold dog logs under the dining room table. My wife, Heather, dragged Gary over and scolded him for his crime. But the next morning: same thing. This wasn't an accident. This was a message.

We had to do something, so we decided that Gary would sleep in the bedroom with us. That way we'd hear him whine to go out. The night passed uneventfully, Gary with us and Dino sounding like a sawmill out in the living room. Gary slept through the night and didn't poop in our bedroom. Problem solved.

Or so we thought. When Heather walked out into the kitchen the next morning, her jaw dropped and she silently pointed toward the dining room: There, in the customary spot, were fresh turds. It was Dino all along. Gary was framed.

We were mad at Dino, sure, but also a little bit impressed. Dino's never pooped in the house before, and he chose to start doing it in such a way that we'd think it was the puppy, the one getting all the attention for being so smart and well-behaved. He overplayed his hand, but I have to think ol' Dino was snickering as Gary got his nose shoved in someone else's poop. It was the perfect crime.

Perhaps Dino is a little sharper than I give him credit for. Or maybe he's just lazy. Either way, it appears our dog training sessions with Robert won't be wrapping up any time soon, and Dino is back in our bedroom so he can't escape to his midnight poop spot. You know, Cesar Millan always used to say that there are no bad dogs, only bad owners. I have plenty of time to reflect on that as I try to fall asleep with Dino snoring away down there on the floor next to me. Right where he wanted to be all along. ◆

AIRING IT OUT

THE MEDIA COUPLE CHATS ABOUT FAN ENCOUNTERS, HOCKEY AND SPEAKING FRANKLY

SPORTS RADIO AND TV PERSONALITY MICHAEL FELGER, 48, is a co-host of Felger & Mazz on the Sports Hub (98.5 FM) and an on-air personality for NBC Sports Boston. A former Boston Herald sports columnist, he is originally from Milwaukee and graduated from Boston University in 1992. His wife, Sara Underwood, is the morning anchor on Boston 25 News (Ch. 25). Born and raised in Palo Alto, California, she went to UCLA and worked at WBZ-TV (Ch. 4) before joining her current station in 2008. They live in Wellesley with their two daughters.

Jonathan Soroff: Do you guys ever fight over sports?
SARA UNDERWOOD: We don't talk about sports.
MICHAEL FELGER: She doesn't know if it's puffed or stuffed.

Do you ask him a lot of questions?
SU: If I do, he says, "Do you really want to know, 'Wood?"
MF: And the answer is: She doesn't.

Which of you is the better reporter?
SU: Michael, by far.
MF: I suck as a reporter!
SU: You're one of the smartest people I know! He has an encyclopedia in his head, full of all the sports knowledge.
MF: That's not being a good reporter. I'm a good shit-talker. She reads off a teleprompter, and I talk shit.

So are you purposefully provocative on the air?
MF: Yes! What's the point of going on the air and doing a show if you're not going to be provocative? I'm purposefully provocative, but that doesn't mean that I'm making it up. I'm sensitive to that question because people accuse me of saying things just to say them, which isn't true. I try to think differently and say things that get a reaction, and that's the whole point of doing a talk show.

If you were going to play a sport, what would it be?
MF: Hockey. Favorite to cover, favorite to watch, favorite to play.

How about you, Sara?
SU: Does barre class count? [Laughs.]

Are you jealous that he doesn't have to care what he looks like when he goes to work?
SU: I'm so jealous, but he's naturally hot, so it's OK. He can wear a T-shirt and jeans or even sweatpants.
MF: Of course, she's jealous! Her alarm rings at 2:30 in the morning, and she has to get ready. I walk out the door at 1:40 in the afternoon for a 2 o'clock show.

How do you handle your conflicting schedules?
SU: I think that's what makes our marriage so good. We've been married for 15 years now. I think it's because we don't see a lot of each other during the week. [Laughs.]
MF: And when we do, she comes home in her hot anchor woman outfit, so it's perfect. And when I get home, she's about to go to bed. Perfect.

Do you ever pick out what she wears on the news?
MF: No.
SU: I'll pick out what he wears on occasion.

SU: No.
MF: Not really.
SU: When was the last time you watched me?
MF: I flipped you on the other day when you were on until 1 o'clock in the afternoon with the snow. Just to see what she was wearing.

What's your favorite Boston sports franchise?
MF: The Bruins. For some reason, I grew up a Bruins fan in Milwaukee. As a little kid, that was just the team I picked.
SU: He was a big hockey player growing up.
MF: No, I wasn't. I sucked.

"We've been married for 15 years now. I think it's because we don't see a lot of each other during the week."

Thing you'd most like to be able to say on air?
MF: The real story inside the walls at Gillette. What really goes on there between Belichick and Kraft and Belichick and Brady. Their interactions. There's a lot of stuff there.

Thing most people would be surprised to learn about you?
MF: I don't know what they think of us in the first place, so I don't know what they'd be surprised to know. Do you think I'm that much different at home than I am on the radio?
SU: I think your opinions are pretty consistent, but what people don't know about him is that he's extremely sensitive.
MF: How am I extremely sensitive?
SU: Maybe that's not the right word. Michael is a very warm, caring, loving person. He's dedicated to his family and his girls. That's his life. I don't think that's a side people get to see.
MF: There's a lot of girl time. I spend my free time watching princess movies with the 6-year-old.
SU: But as frank as he is on the radio, he's equally frank at home with our kids.

Michael, what would people be surprised to learn about Sara?
SU: That I'm unorganized and messy. [Laughs.]
MF: A tremendous slob. An absolutely historic, tremendous slob. I've tried everything to get her to pick up her shit. If you walked into her closet, you would either say, "This person has real issues," or "It's a 19-year-old college student who just left home for the first time." It's bad. This is a grown woman. It's horrible.

UNDERWOOD'S DREAM INTERVIEW
Tom and Gisele

How do you feel about the label "media power couple?"
MF: No. A media power couple is Les Moonves and Julie Chen. James Carville and Mary Matalin. We're a couple of local anchors. That's not a power couple. That's D-minus list kind of stuff.

Weirdest fan encounter?
SU: I think it's fun going to games with him. The number of people who walk by him and shout "Fel-gah!" It's constant. It's either, "Felger, you suck!" or "Felger, I love you, man!" It's awesome.

Are you a fan?
MF: I'm really only a fan of the Bruins. The other teams, I want them to win, but that's just business. We carry the Patriots games or the Celtics games, so it's good for business when they win. But that's my head talking, not my heart.
SU: I love my hometown Boston teams. I was born and raised in California, but I am a true Boston sports fan. I've been here for 17 years now, and this is where my daughters are from.
MF: I call bullshit.
SU: I love my teams! I can't get him to take me to enough games. I love going to them.

POWER

BY MATT MARTINELLI
PHOTOGRAPHED BY KERRY BRETT

In terms of debuts, you don't get more impressive than Chris Sale's first year with the Red Sox after six-plus seasons with the Chicago White Sox.

His first game? He threw seven scoreless innings in a win.

His first month? He averaged 10 strikeouts a game.

His first season? He finished with a league-leading 308 strikeouts and was runner-up in Cy Young voting.

With the bar set so high, the lanky lefty might be hard-pressed for a similarly impressive encore. But after a busy offseason that included a goodwill trip, unwinding with his kids and lots of working out, Sale's sights are set on making sure this season comes with a more pleasant ending. And he keeps repeating the same mantra: "We're talking about November." Although Game 7 of a World Series would be Oct. 31, you get the drift.

UP

IF THE Red Sox do end up playing in the final week of October, perhaps the spark of chemistry that inspired them could be traced to a trip to hurricane-ravaged Puerto Rico in late January. Sale was among those who traveled there, including front office staff and teammates such as Rick Porcello and island natives such as manager Alex Cora and catcher Christian Vazquez. The team, along with Mayor Marty Walsh, arrived with medicine, flashlights, batteries and even some baseball gear—a total of 10 tons of supplies. While the trip was short, it still resonates months later with Sale.

"The drive in was probably the most eye-opening," Sale says. "It's crazy to think you're half a year away from that hurricane happening down there in [Puerto Rico] and there's still no power, signs down, trees down. Our driver who was driving our van, I was sitting up front and talking with him a lot. We were driving through areas that are usually heavily, heavily wooded and he was pointing to one spot. He said, 'Do you see all those houses over there? Before the hurricane you couldn't see those houses because there were so many trees and bushes and things like that.' And you're still kind of seeing that there's a lot of work that needs to be done down there."

Sale had seen his Florida residence survive the wrath of Hurricane Irma right before Hurricane Maria tore through Puerto Rico. He can't help but compare the two experiences. Before Irma hit, Sale flew up his wife, their two kids and a few of their friends, allowing them to avoid the storm while hanging out in Boston. Their neighbors texted photos of flooding on their street, their mailbox nearly submerged, and a few trees down on their property, one onto a fence. But overall, the Sales were spared much damage, and a half-year later, much of Florida has recovered. His experience in Puerto Rico told a different story.

"I have a 7 year old and a 1 year old and I'm looking at these kids running around and I'm trying to put myself in that scenario. Where we went, there's no electricity, there's nothing. They're still doing everything they can to get back to normal. That's a tough spot to be in. Even for a couple of hours, it was nice to take their mind off it and help them out as much as we can," says Sale, who is hoping to do more for the island in the future. "When you go down and you're helping people that: A, need help; and B, really appreciate what you're doing—I just don't think there's anything much more satisfying. You see the real passion and appreciation of these people, and it was eye-opening."

The trip also allowed Cora to bond with Sale and some of the players—a group that hadn't really been able to spend much time together since the manager was hired in October. "Just to see the appreciation, not only from [Cora and Vazquez], but from people down there, the people we were going to help, just the true passion they have and the real deep appreciation that I saw in everyone down there was great."

THE list of pitchers who struggled in their first season with the Sox this century is long and full of accomplished aces. It includes some players in their primes: Porcello, Josh Beckett and David Price. And it includes some players at the tail end of their careers: Bartolo Colon, John Smoltz, David Wells. Porcello, who watched Sale pitch for Chicago while he was playing for their divisional rival in Detroit through 2014, knew the 6-foot-6-inch pitcher wouldn't be fazed by the Boston environment.

"It wasn't surprising to me at all. I'm not saying it was easy for him to do that by any means. But if anyone was going to come in and pick up where he left off with his former team, it'd be him. Just because of his work ethic, mentally how stable he is and how strong he is—and then obviously all of the talented gifts he has physically on the mound. It's a pretty damn good combination."

While Sale's 2017 performance put to rest any doubts he would collapse under the Boston pressure, he did finish the season on a more sour note than he started. He gave up 5 or more earned runs in 4 of his final 12 starts—including Game 1 of the ALDS—after only giving up that many runs once in his first 21 starts. That's not something Sale is hoping to repeat, which is why his spring training workouts have been a bit different this year—ramping up activity a little later in the spring so that he's hopefully fresher for the postseason. But the offseason training for Sale was as serious as ever. Porcello, who trained alongside Sale for part of the offseason, spent some time at his own house in Naples during the winter and the two met up about 10 times to workout together.

"There's a Pilates studio in Naples that we go to together. He kind of got me into Pilates and I started doing that this offseason. It really kind of opened my eyes up to how beneficial a Pilates workout is for a pitcher in terms of body control and stuff. Last year, just watching how he works and what kind of a guy he is, it made me want to be around him even more just to kind of shadow what he does. He does it just about as good as everyone I've ever seen," Porcello says. "It's more about his work ethic and how on point he is with every workout. He's there, he doesn't miss anything. Not that I was missing workouts, but it just kind of reinforces that dedication to your offseason program—and understanding that that's what prepares you to have a good year."

While Sale spent a large chunk of the offseason doing normal dad stuff—dropping off his oldest son at school, playing in the pool with his kids, visiting family—he also found time to hang out with Porcello. The two often played pingpong at Sale's house or played some golf (Porcello says he's never beaten him).

"I think, not only myself, but everyone on the team has developed a really good relationship and friendship with him on and off the field," Porcello says. "Obviously he's got a family and kids, so it wasn't like we were hanging out every day, but whenever we had an opportunity, we were working out or playing golf or something."

THE 2018 edition of the Red Sox will feature a roster that looks a lot like the 2017 team, but with an almost entirely new coaching staff that's expected to produce better on-field results and off-field chemistry. Sale says he's already clicked with new pitching coach Dana Levangie, who previously served as the team's bullpen coach. And Cora even has the team enthused about March workouts.

"Alex has been awesome. He's keeping it light, having fun, but he's got attention to detail. [He says,] 'We're not going to be out here all day doing this, but we're going to do it right, and if we don't do it right, we're going to do it until we get it right,' " Sale says. "I think that's a great philosophy to have. I think a lot of times, you get out there and you get redundant. We're doing 10 or 15 reps and a few are kind of half-hearted. He's under the assumption of, 'I'd rather give you 7 or 8 really good ones than 15 all-right ones.' I think the guys have responded really well to that. We've had a blast in the locker room and the clubhouse, so we're just going to try to keep building on that."

It's similar to the work ethic Sale developed while at Florida Gulf Coast University, the one he honed in Chicago, where he began as a reliever and ended as a head-turning ace, and the one he showed the fruits of in his first season in Boston. That first season will always hold a soft spot in Sale's heart: "Fenway Park with the energy and the fans—when I was in Chicago, pitching at Fenway was one of my favorite places to play. Now that I get to do it in the home whites, it's even better."

But regular-season success won't be enough for Sale. While it's still months away from the end goal of the World Series, he can't get his mind off the fall.

Who knows, maybe Game 7 will stretch into the early morning of Nov. 1. If so, you might be talking about Sale's clutch October performance. Or you might be talking about his soothsayer skills.

"We're still talking about November." ◆

J.D. MARTINEZ

MAKING A RUN

It's baseball time, believe it or not. Sure, there's an outside chance that the 23rd nor'easter of the spring will drop a foot of snow on April 5, leading to a baseball redux of the Foxboro snowplow game—except this time the plow clears the third-base line so Mookie Betts can steal home for a 1-0 victory. That sounds unlikely, but where the Red Sox are concerned, nothing would surprise us anymore. For instance, last year's pitching staff had a regular-season ERA of 3.70, the lowest since 1992. Yet it is also true that midseason waiver-wire pickup Doug Fister started Game 3 of the American League Division Series. If you don't remember how he fared, let's just say you don't want to run out and buy a Fister jersey—and not just for the obvious reasons. The 2017 pitching staff was a baseball version of Sehrödinger's cat, both dead and alive simultaneously.

BY EZRA DYER

RAFAEL DEVERS JACKIE BRADLEY JR.

So the Red Sox didn't win the World Series. Or make it to the ALCS. But if a few things shook out a little bit differently—say, if Xander Bogaerts didn't get hit on the hand by a pitch in July and David Price stayed healthy—maybe the team would've gone deeper into October. This team, after all, did best the mighty New York Aaron Judges in the regular season.

All the 2017 Red Sox really needed was better luck and a 45-home-run power hitter. Well, they've procured one of those things. Of course, we're talking about the Talisman of Boggs, an ancient slab engraved with glyphs of chicken and beer that is said to bring wondrous fortune to whoever possesses it. Oh, and they signed J.D. Martinez. So can this crew go further than their 2017 predecessors? Let's take a look. »

BLAKE SWIHART, SANDY LEON AND CHRISTIAN VAZQUEZ

INFIELD

First, let's talk about Alex Cora. We're psyched that the Red Sox are shaking up the infield with this veteran player, whose deft glo—what? Cora's the manager? Wasn't he teammates with Dustin Pedroia, like, yesterday? OK, well, cool. It's nice to have a manager who could sub himself in, if the need arises. Why, this town hasn't seen anything like that since Kobe Bryant's dad, Jellybean, was a player/coach for the Boston Frenzy in the American Basketball Association. And if you think this whole paragraph is primarily an excuse to remind you that Jellybean Bryant played for the Boston Frenzy, well, you'd be right. But we're also optimistic about Cora. The manager's job depends on respect from the players, and it's easy to respect a guy who's not long removed from the field himself. Cora understands what a modern player goes through because he was one. Very recently.

And Cora's going to have some enviable options when it comes to the infield. Pedroia is coming back from knee surgery, so in the meantime Eduardo Nuncz looks like the starter at second base. The Sox acquired Nunez from the Giants last July, and he was on fire from the start. He had 19 hits in his first 10 games and ended up hitting .321 with eight home runs over 38 games. Nunez became a free agent at the end of the year but the Red Sox re-signed him in February. Good move.

At third base, there's Rafael Devers, who, like Nunez, made a big impact when he got his chance last year. Devers came up at the end of July and only played 58 games, but he hit 10 dingers (and a not-too-shabby .284). And he's young. How young? Last year Devers became the first player in Red Sox history to hit a postseason home run and later get negged by the bouncer at the Cask 'N Flagon. That second part didn't happen (as far as we know), but it is true that Devers was 20 years old when he helped propel the Sox past the Astros in Game 3 of the American League Division Series. And he's fast, as proven in the next game when he hit an inside-the-park homer in the bottom of the ninth. The last time we had a homegrown third-base talent this good, we traded him for Larry Andersen.

At short, we have a back-to-full-strength Bogaerts, a guy who's as likely to win a batting title as he is to get his name butchered at Starbucks. So: pretty good chance.

The problem area, if you can call it that, is first base. And the problem is that Hanley Ramirez and Mitch Moreland are both good. They combined for 45 home runs last year. But with Martinez likely filling the designated hitter spot most days, there's only room for one of them at first. And if Martinez is slotted in the outfield, then you lose either Mookie Betts, Andrew Benintendi or Jackie Bradley Jr. Any way you look at it, there's a good hitter on the bench.

Which is why Blake Swihart is so important. Swihart can play almost any position from catcher to Lansdowne Street sausage vendor, which gives Cora flexibility to solve the Sale-Leon Conundrum. Which, if you're not familiar, is thus: Chris Sale really likes pitching to Sandy Leon rather than Christian Vazquez—in the two games Vazquez caught Sale, our ace's ERA was 13.50. Yet Vazquez outhit Leon .290 to .225. If only we could have it both ways, with the best from Sale and more pop at the plate. Well, maybe we can sometimes, because if Vazquez has a day off to rest the ol' hammies, Swihart can sub in at catcher after Leon is pulled for a pinch hitter. It won't happen every day, but mark our words this scenario will generate a win at some point this season. And it'll all be thanks to Blake "America's" Swihart.

OUTFIELD

As is the case with the infield, the outfield looks like an embarrassment of riches. The worst thing you can say about it is that Bradley Jr. hasn't quite lived up to the extravagant expectations he brought upon himself after his 2016 All-Star year. But he still put up respectable numbers at the plate while playing outrageously good defense. And he'll be flanked by 23-year-old Benintendi (.271, 20 homers, 90 RBI last year) and 25-year-old Betts (24 home runs, 26 stolen bases). This is a young, fast, strong-hitting outfield. And we haven't even gotten to Martinez yet.

The Red Sox' blockbuster $110 million offseason trophy will find himself in the outfield some days. But the Sox didn't acquire Martinez for his glove. They acquired him because his hitting stats recall 2005-era Manny Ramirez, minus the whimsical insanity. As in, Martinez is a .300, 40-home-run guy who probably won't disappear into the Green Monster during games or high-five a fan in the middle of a clutch play or sell his gas grill on eBay. OK, fine. We're getting a little nostalgic now. But what we're really nostalgic for is a power hitter of the Manny-Papi idiom, a guy whose very presence makes everyone in the lineup more productive as pitchers try to avoid the fearsome cleanup guy.

And Martinez is fearsome at the plate. Last year, he was traded from Detroit to Arizona midway through the season and ended up leading both the American League and the National League in slugging percentage. That pretty much tells you what you need to know.

PITCHING

Last year's team had an enviable overall ERA, but injuries were the bane of the staff. We know the wins count the same no matter when you get them, but this year the mission is to make the playoffs without melting the arms of the key starters. Easier said than done, sure, but if there's a healthy lead in mid-September, then that might be a fine time to try a six-man rotation or have Sale develop a surprise pinkie blister that makes him a late scratch. Last year, Sale pitched 214 1/3 innings during the regular season—more than anyone else in baseball. That's an indication of excellence in that he went deep into a lot of games, but proactively dialing back the workload could help the cause come October.

Next in the rotation, there's Price, whose elbow injury limited him to 11 starts last year. Price didn't get a lot of innings, but his 6-3 record and 3.38 ERA would've extrapolated to a very nice season. And he looked great coming out of the bullpen in the postseason. No, picking a fight with Dennis Eckersley probably wasn't a great move and Price is still looking for his first career postseason win. But that simply means he's got something to prove. If he can stay healthy, Price can give the Sox an intimidating one-two punch alongside Sale in any series.

Make that a one-two-three punch, depending on which Rick Porcello the Sox get this year. Will it be Cy Young Porcello (2016), or 11-17 Porcello (2017)? Porcello's pitching last year was actually better than his stats suggest—more often than not, he'd get off to a bad start before settling down after the first inning. That's a solvable problem, so you can feel good about the top three.

The bottom of the rotation, per usual, is where the questions lie. Drew Pomeranz is a solid fourth starter, but he might be hurt. Eduardo Rodriguez and Steven Wright will probably both start the season on the disabled list, which means there is room for perhaps two starters. Brian Johnson, and not the one from AC/DC, shook the Mariners all night long last May, throwing a shutout. Johnson later won the Lou Gorman Award for perseverance in making the major leagues despite challenges that included multiple line drives to the head and a carjacking at gunpoint. So he's a likely candidate, as is Hector Velazquez. But whether those guys work out or flame out is anyone's guess. By July, there could be a solid Tim Wakefield or Bronson Arroyo out there. Or there could be a haggard journeyman with a mid-4 ERA.

At least the bullpen looks good. Last year's bullpen had an ERA of 3.15, which was bettered by only Cleveland. Ace closer Craig Kimbrel is back, and the setup guys look promising, too. Consider Carson Smith, also known as Smitty. That tall drink of water had a fantastic year for Seattle in 2015, throwing in 70 games with a 2.32 ERA. But in 2016, after the Sox acquired him, he pitched less than three innings and underwent Tommy John surgery. Smith returned at the end of last year and allowed only one run over eight games, hopefully a preview of what he'll deliver this year.

It's exciting to see Joe Kelly back, particularly since he's given to disguising himself as reporter "Jim Buchanan" at spring training. The getup—which somehow combined a white goatee and a mullet—was convincing enough that neither coaches nor security recognized him when he wandered into the middle of a live fielding practice—even when he picked up a stray ball and tossed it to a coach at about 93 mph. We hope NESN signs Jim Buchanan as its exclusive in-bullpen commentator.

So, the Red Sox are in a not unfamiliar situation. The offense is stacked, the bullpen is right and the top of the rotation looks intimidating. There's a lot of young players and they didn't really lose anyone key from the team that won the AL East. Hey, maybe this will even be the year that Rusney Castillo works out. He's owed $35.5 million, so it would be cool if he were something more than the most expensive Pawtucket player in history. But they can live without him.

Can they live with the bottom of the starting rotation, though, given all the injuries and unknowns? That remains to be seen. In the postseason, that wouldn't really matter so much. But let's not get ahead of ourselves. First, the Sox need to win a few games. So by golly, let's get out there, put on our thermal underwear, warm up the third-base plow and play ball. ◆

AGENDA for 3/28–4/10

In Good Taste

Take in this culinary event

SOME OF BOSTON'S most-celebrated chefs will flex their culinary skills for a good cause at the annual Joslin Diabetes Center's Taste of Ginger event on April 9. Scott Jensen of Banyan Bar + Refuge, Tracy Chang from PAGU and Jimmy Salomo of Parsnip are among some 30 toques flocking to the Museum of Fine Arts to support the Asian American Diabetes Initiative. At this evening to honor the Moy family—owners of China Pearl and Shojo—guests admire art while enjoying live music and yummy bites. Gather your (taste) buds and head to the MFA on April 9. / Julia Aparicio

GOOD AND READY This past year has been all about Tiffany Haddish, from her star-making turn in Girls Trip to her sidesplitting guest role on Saturday Night Live when she became the first black female stand-up comedian to host—and don't get us started about her appearance with Maya Rudolph at the Academy Awards, when the duo transformed a presenting spot into a rollicking buddy comedy. When it comes to her own material, Haddish mines her past growing up in South Central LA and foster care for a brand of comedy that's at once heartfelt and hilariously offensive. Get ready for laughs when her #SheReady comedy tour hits the Wilbur Theatre on April 7. / Nathan Tavares

ISLE OF DOGS ★★★ ½ The artificiality that I'd once found so endearing in Wes Anderson's early triumphs—Rushmore and The Royal Tenenbaums—began to congeal in The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou and The Darjeeling Limited. I was so convinced that he'd boxed himself into an overly precious dollhouse constructed from his movies' intentional feeling of artifice that I mistook 2009's stop-motion animated Fantastic Mr. Fox—his delightful adaptation of Roald Dahl's book featuring meticulously sculpted sets and puppet characters—to be the film he'd spent a career building toward. But after his magical live-action hits Moonrise Kingdom and The Grand Budapest Hotel, I humbly—and happily—admit that I was wrong. Still, I was thrilled by the prospect of his return to handcrafted animation with his latest piece of whimsy featuring anthropomorphized animals, Isle of Dogs. Based on an idea he concocted with Roman Coppola, Jason Schwartzman and Kunichi Nomura (who voices a villainous mayor modeled after Toshiro Mifune), this Japan-set tale offers numerous pleasures, beginning with its huge cast of notable voice actors (Bryan Cranston leads a scrappy band of canines that also includes Edward Norton, Jeff Goldblum, Bob Balaban and Anderson MVP Bill Murray) and one newcomer (Koyu Rankin) as a boy in search of his lost dog (Liev Schreiber). And while it doesn't quite scratch the painful raw humanity and melancholy of the filmmaker's best, a newfound political dimension offers plenty to chew on. Reviews by Brett Michel & Edited by Cathryn Haight

ANNIHILATION ★★★★ London-born Alex Garland's films are full of ideas. While he crammed too many into Ex Machina—the novelist-turned-screenwriter's debut picture as a writer/director—both of the sci-fi thrillers he scripted for director Danny Boyle—28 Days Later and Sunshine—tended to abandon a lot of his best ideas during their third acts, when cerebral notions gave way to slasher movie thrills. But Annihilation, a very loose adaptation of the first book in Jeff VanderMeer's Southern Reach Trilogy and Garland's second foray as a writer/director, relies far more on heady sci-fi concepts, even as it focuses on a mysterious mission undertaken by five female scientists armed with assault rifles. Natalie Portman stars as Lena, a biologist whose hollow eyes occasionally well up with tears as she struggles to accept that she may never again see her husband (Ex Machina's Oscar Isaac), who deployed a year ago on his own secretive mission and is presumed dead. That is, until he reappears one night, acting more confused than his shell-shocked wife. And then he begins to cough up blood. Turns out he's just emerged from "The Shimmer," a translucent, glistening—and growing—field of energy resembling a massive soap bubble that's enveloped a southern swath of coastal marshland. While viewers conditioned to expect spoon-fed answers to tidy narratives might want to stick with properties like Star Wars, those up for a challenge should prepare to lose themselves in the dreamlike qualities of Annihilation's aural and visual design, which transforms nightmares into a work of art. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Black Panther ★★★ Before the release of 2008's Iron Man, the idea of an interconnected series of films spun out of the pages of comic books was a pipe dream held by middle-aged man-children who never quite outgrew superhero stories. A decade later, Disney's Marvel Studios has successfully launched 18 hit movies, sustaining these serialized action adventures by setting each film within a different genre. Take the three Captain America pictures: The First Avenger, a star-spangled, patriotic paean to the Greatest Generation's battle against fascism; The Winter Soldier, a contemporary action movie deeply indebted to the paranoid thrillers of the 1970s; and Civil War, the story of a fractured family torn apart in an ideological battle of brother against brother. Civil War also introduced T'Challa (Chadwick Boseman), king of the fictional African nation of Wakanda and the man behind the mask of the Black Panther. With T'Challa's first solo film, director and co-writer Ryan Coogler (Creed) borrows the spiritual aspects and Shakespearean aspirations of Disney's The Lion King, while paying homage to the adventures of suave super-spy James Bond. And although a strong cast of women (newcomer Letitia Wright, The Walking Dead's Danai Gurira, Oscar nominee Angela Bassett and Oscar winner Lupita Nyong'o) anchor the film, it's Creed star Michael B. Jordan who elevates it. His Killmonger is a fully fleshed-out villain whose motivation might even be justified. For a film that's been greeted as a defining moment for both cinema and black America, this is perhaps its greatest surprise of all. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

The Death of Stalin ★★★ This latest (and darkest) farce from Armando Iannucci (creator of HBO's Veep) may be set in 1953 and center on the political machinations of those orbiting Josef Stalin (Adrian McLoughlin) at the time of his death, but let's be honest: The bumbling oafs—barely able to continue the charade of Russia's totalitarian regime while plotting to stab each other in the back (or shoot each other in the forehead)—might as well be set in the here and now. And once you hear a bald-pated, flat-nosed Steve Buscemi continue to speak in his Brooklyn patois in his role as Nikita Khrushchev, or watch a bewigged Jeffrey Tambor nervously attempt to talk tough in his Southern California drawl as Stalin's successor, Georgy Malenkov, the similarities to our current White House are unmistakable. Based on a French graphic novel, the film opens as the Soviet dictator phones a concert hall, demanding a recording of the live performance he's just heard on the radio. But since the concert was not recorded, a panicked employee (Paddy Considine) frantically orders the orchestra and audience to sit back down for a repeat concerto, even though some of them have already departed. When a replacement conductor is summoned out of bed and taken away while still dressed in a bathrobe, he wishes his wife a final farewell, fearing the worst. And why not? After all, his neighbors across the hall are simultaneously being rounded up for execution. While not quite as sharp as Iannucci's last film (In the Loop, a satire of the politics of Bush and Blair), the humor nevertheless kills. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Death Wish ★ If you're hankering for a fix of Bruce Willis starring as a hooded vigilante in Chicago, stick with Unbreakable, M. Night Shyamalan's 2000 thriller. As dour and ridiculous as that film was, at least it had the sense not to promote the Good Guys with Guns fallacy that's been debunked after the Parkland shooting. But then, there was probably never going to be a good time to release a remake of 1974's Death Wish. MGM obviously realized this when it quietly moved this bloody revenge picture directed by torture porn auteur Eli Roth (Hostel) from its original November release date to distance the movie from the Las Vegas shooting that claimed 58 lives. Even screenwriter Joe Carnahan has distanced himself from the film, which queasily reimagines Paul Kersey, the architect played by Charles Bronson in the original film and subsequent sequels, as a surgeon who decides to arm himself and start taking the lives of "scumbags" at night. This of course stands in stark contrast to his day job, where he's dedicated to saving whoever rolls into his emergency room. Alas, something snapped when the latest gunshot victims to turn up in the ER were his beloved wife (Elisabeth Shue) and their college-bound daughter (Camila Morrone). As in the previous picture—and the novel it's based on—this leaves Paul to hurtle toward his secret, homicidal hobby as "the Grim Reaper." And while Roth's film is slicker, what once passed as entertainment is now simply gross. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Love, Simon ★★★1/2 For anyone who's ever seen a John Hughes movie set in high school, Greg Berlanti's Love, Simon will feel familiar—but with a key difference: It's the first romantic comedy that focuses on a closeted gay teenager to be released by a major studio. Even more notable is how normal everything seems. All the teen movie tropes are here, from the best friends who suffer misunderstandings to the supportive parents with hearts of gold. Mind you, there's nothing in this affable film that offers the depth of the father/son heart-to-heart that devastates during the conclusion of Luca Guadagnino's exquisite Call Me by Your Name, but Nick Robinson (Jurassic World) will charm you as Simon Spier, the 16-year-old protagonist with a secret he's kept from those closest to him. Complicating matters, he's fallen for an anonymous gay classmate he chats with online, a relationship that's threatened to be exposed by Martin (Before I Fall's Logan Miller), a goofy loner who stumbles across Simon's heartfelt emails on a school computer when our hero accidentally leaves his Gmail logged in. The plot really gets rolling when Martin blackmails Simon into helping him win the affection of Abby (X-Men: Apocalypse's Alexandra Shipp), who's part of a close circle that also includes Nick (Brigsby Bear's Jorge Lendeborg Jr.) and lifelong friend Leah (Katherine Langford of Netflix's 13 Reasons Why). Despite an unnecessary bit of conflict that's quickly resolved in the final act, this is a sweet film that should speak to anyone who's ever felt alone. In other words: All of us. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Oh Lucy! ★★★ Based on her short film of the same name, Atsuko Hirayanagi's Tokyo- and San Diego-set Oh Lucy! briefly recalls Wong Kar-wai's Chungking

SIMON SAYS Greg Berlanti's Love, Simon follows a gay teen as he maneuvers through coming out and romantic encounters. PHOTO: BEN ROTHSTEIN

Express, what with the blond hair sported by both movies' Asian female leads and the allusions to California Dreamin'. And while Hirayanagi lacks the bleeding cool style that Wong had already developed by the time of his third feature's release, this is a promising debut for her. Shinobu Terajima stars as Setsuko, a chain-smoking, emotionally unfulfilled office worker who's never forgiven her haughty sister Ayako (Kaho Minami) for stealing the man she loved. Single, middle-aged and bitter, Setsuko enrolls in an English class after being manipulated by her niece, Mika (Shioli Kutsuna), Ayako's flighty daughter. It's here that she meets John (Josh Hartnett), her unorthodox teacher in the "school" that appears to be little more than a front for a low-level gangster. John's idea of teaching involves extended hugs and role-playing. Soon Setsuko is donning a wig and calling herself "Lucy," the better to please her handsome American instructor. But when he suddenly quits and flees to the States with Mika, Setsuko's alter ego takes over and Lucy and Ayako follow them to southern California. Quirky? Sure. But the film's also true to its characters and their dark emotional histories, which Hirayanagi doesn't shy away from exploring. It's also rich with humor, which isn't terribly surprising once you discover Will Ferrell is one of the picture's producers. (In English and Japanese with English subtitles. At Kendall Square.)

Red Sparrow ★★ In today's society, it's hard to overlook the amount of physical, sexual and emotional violence perpetrated against women in this adaptation of Jason Matthews' Edgar Award-winning spy novel. Early in the film, the wonderfully named Dominika Egorova (Jennifer Lawrence, who really should know better), a prima ballerina with the Bolshoi Ballet, has her career cut short when her dance partner (Sergei Polunin) "accidentally" breaks her leg during a performance. In order to continue providing shelter and medical care for her sick mother (Joely Richardson), she's forced to attend "whore school," where she's taught to "inure yourself to what you find repellent." That lesson comes from the headmistress, played by Charlotte Rampling—one of the only performers who seems to be aware of how trashy this material is—who also teaches Dominika to weaponize the body she's repeatedly told belongs to the state. I guess that's supposed to excuse the assaults and rapes she endures. But then, Dominika also fights against the patriarchy by bludgeoning her former partner and the dancer (Nicole O'Neill) he conspired with to replace her, while director Francis Lawrence (no relation) hovers over their naked, battered bodies. After starring in Mother! and now this picture of ill-repute, Jennifer Lawrence's reported break from her movie career couldn't come at a more needed time. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, Somerville, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

Thoroughbreds ★★★ Playwright-turned-filmmaker Cory Finley made a number of good decisions in his debut as a writer/director. Not only is Thoroughbreds exceptionally well cast, but his choice to hire cellist and fellow New Yorker Erik Friedlander to provide an atonal music score to keep viewers off balance was an inspired idea that adds a great deal to the dramatic thriller's wildly unpredictable nature. Essentially a four-character chamber piece, Thoroughbreds stars Anya Taylor-Joy (The Witch) as Lily, a Connecticut teenager who's hiding her true nature behind a rich-girl exterior. When the picture opens, this chipper boarding school student is reconnecting with the cooly detached Amanda (Bates Motel's Olivia Cooke), her childhood best friend—initially because Amanda's mother has paid her to do so. Amanda's a hyper-intelligent sociopath, so there's really no need for Lily to tutor her, which is their excuse for getting together during afternoons that gradually stretch into evenings at the expansive mansion owned by Mark (House of Cards' Paul Sparks), Lily's oppressive stepfather. While they rebuild their relationship through brutally honest confessions, they bond over their mutual hatred of Mark. The story would seem familiar to viewers of Henri-Georges Clouzot's Diabolique and Sidney Lumet's adaptation of Equus, if it didn't continually surprise. Generously, Finley has dedicated this film to the late Anton Yelchin, who makes his final screen appearance as a small-time drug dealer struggling to escape the girls' toxic orbit. (At Boston Common and Fenway.)

Tomb Raider ★1/2 True to form, the latest actress to fill the boots of tomb-raiding adventuress Lara Croft is leaping from an Oscar win into what she hopes will be her own lucrative action franchise, just like Angelina Jolie once did. Alas, Alicia Vikander (supporting actress winner for The Danish Girl) is wasted as Norwegian director Roar Uthaug moves the video game heroine from TV to the big screen for the third time in 17 years, spending far too much time sketching in an unnecessary backstory, while not nearly enough in the titular tomb. Essentially a pauper at the film's outset, Lara can't even afford her gym membership since she refuses to claim her father's fortune, which would entail admitting that he's dead. Strangely, a bicycle race through the streets of London provides the film's action highlight, and it occurs during the film's first 15 minutes. After a character asks why someone with her background would be a bike courier, you might wonder the same thing. Thirty minutes in, she's in Hong Kong, chartering a boat from Lu Ren (Daniel Wu), a drunk whose dad is also presumed dead. One shipwreck later, the pair are enslaved by the dastardly Matthias Vogel (The Hateful Eight's Walton Goggins) on the lost island of Yamatai, as they're forced to help him search for the mythical resting place of a cursed queen. As games, the Tomb Raider series used to be little more than tarted-up Indiana Jones knockoffs, but at least they were fun to play. This reboot of a knockoff of a knockoff simply bores. (At Assembly Row, Boston Common, Fenway, Seaport, South Bay and in the suburbs.)

BEETHOVEN'S BEATS

Despite naming their 2015 album Stereotypes, Floridian duo Black Violin reworks the classic expectations of string instruments by fusing drums and R&B-inspired vocal overlays into their tracks. Violist Wil B. and violinist Kev Marcus have worked alongside musicians on both sides of their hyphenated classical-R&B genre, sharing a stage with Alicia Keys at the Billboard Awards and performing for President Obama in 2013. For their 2018 Classical Boom tour, drummer Nat Stokes and DJ SPS join the duo to blend hip-hop beats into vocal-heavy tracks like "Magie," while some songs, such as "Runnin'," stay instrumental. Get some string renewal when Black Violin adds fresh vibes to Vivaldi and more at the Berklee Performance Center on April 7. / Brynne Crawley

FEAR NO MIRROR®

Results and patient experience may vary. While CoolSculpting is safe, some rare side effects may occur. As with any medical procedure, only your CoolSculpting provider can help you decide if CoolSculpting is right for you. In the U.S., the CoolSculpting procedure is FDA-cleared for the treatment of visible fat bulges in the submental area, thigh, abdomen and flank. Outside the U.S. the CoolSculpting procedure for non-invasive fat reduction is available worldwide. MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Julia Aparicio

HISTORIC HUES The Concord Museum simulates a thrift shop in Fresh Goods: Shopping for Clothing in a New England Town, featuring a collection of 18th- and 19th-century garments. Curated by David Wood, the exhibit showcases 14 authenticated Concordian ensembles and also includes letters, advertisements, photographs, paintings and diaries from the era to highlight the relationship between people and their clothes, including a Parisian dinner dress and this portrait of Ellen Louisa Tucker Emerson. Guests can even uncover their historic fashion aesthetic through an online shopping mock-up that includes the items on display. Go window shopping at the Concord Museum's Fresh Goods through July 8. / Brynne Crawley

OSTRA offers contemporary Mediterranean cuisine in Boston's Back Bay

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hard-wood charcoal grilling year round.

FAJITAS & 'RITAS [25 West Street (near Boston Common) Boston, 617-426-1222, fajitasandritas.com] Established in 1989, Fajitas & 'Ritas is an award winning, good-vibe, "unabashedly fun" restaurant and bar featuring fresh Texas cuisine. Its namesake specialties include a variety of sizzling fajitas and frosty margaritas at Cheap Eats prices. Enjoy generous portions of fresh and healthy food while you relax in this down-to-earth and funky spot...or... kick back at the bar and sip some "honest margaritas".

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Ed Robinson's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars, Clubs & Lounges

THE HASHTAG HEARD 'ROUND THE WORLD

The unparalleled view of the clock atop the Custom House Tower was a fitting backdrop for Time's Up, a fundraiser for the #MeToo movement held at the State Room.

The epic evening to honor those who have broken the silence included a keynote speech from Hillary Clinton, delicious food from Sweet Cheeks and a performance by latter-day von Trapps Carly Simon and her wildly talented offspring, Ben and Sally Taylor, who performed Simon's 1989 hit "Let the River Run."

The high-octane attendees included political scion Rory Kennedy, poet Rose Styron, advertising giant Jack Connors, car czar Ernie Boch Jr., cupcake mogul Courtney Forrester, the ethereal Simone Winston, Back Bay farm girl Christy Cashman and her stunning sidekick Mary Chiochios, the indomitable Doris Yaffe, talk radio hosts Margery Eagan and Jim Braude, and one man who tearfully admitted to once complimenting a female assistant on her scarf.

"It's a two-way street," said his friend. "I was hired by a female boss who told me I only got the job because I looked like Blake Shelton," to which his wife responded, "Oh, please. You look more like Harvey Weinstein."

AVAST, YE LANDLUBBERS!

Nine months late for Sail Boston, the tall ship Heidi, the pride and joy of the Swiss Navy, entered the harbor and docked at Pier 4 in the Seaport. The double-masted brigantine hosted the Blue Hills Observatory's Winter Warmer and the howling nor'easter outside did nothing to dampen spirits below deck as guests sipped Champagne, nibbled on delicious little cheesy things and flirted shamelessly with the ship's crew.

Present and accounted for: "Downtown" Connie Brown, the unsinkable Anja Kola and her handsome other half, Kiefer McDougall, Beacon Hillions Alli and Bill Achtmeyer, Biddy and Bob Owens, and Liz and Peter Georgantas, TV meteorologists Eric Fisher and Pete Bouchard, ubiquitous gadabout Janet Wu, and several guests who turned an unenviable shade of green from seasickness.

The purpose of the evening was to raise critical funds to reprint science textbooks in public schools, replacing gloomy terms like "global warming" with the more upbeat "endless summer" and swapping in "ocean reclamation" for the alarmist-sounding "sea-level rise."

A Technicolor mermaid hung on a metal ring from the ceiling, performing acrobatic tricks that prompted one man to say, "That's exactly what I'm looking for in a wife."

However, the evening's most amusing moment occurred when a woman didn't realize that she was talking to the Swiss Consul General and said, "Zurich is just Hartford, Connecticut, with a view of the Alps."

GENTLEMEN, START YOUR ENGINES

The House of Blues was transformed into the set of RuPaul's Drag Race when Athlete Ally hosted a mock competition among the top brass from Boston's major league sports franchises.

Taking part were the Patriots' Bob Kraft and Bill Belichick, the Celtics' Wyc Grousbeck and Robert Epstein, John Henry and Tom Werner of the Red Sox, and the Bruins' Jeremy Jacobs and Cam Neely, while the judges included drag divas Verna Turbulence and Ms. Kris Knievil, event planner Bryan Rafanelli and hair deity Sal Malafronte of Mario Russo.

There to cheer them on were friends and family: bookmaker Ben Mezrich and the stylish Tonya, florist extraordinaire Gregory Costa Saint John, brunette bombshell Vanessa Calantropo, bearded hipster Jonathan Weigratz, glamazon Liz Brunner, Chronicle stunner Shayna Seymour and several of the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence.

The competition was fierce, with Kraft doing an admirable job of lip-syncing Sia's "Chandelier" and Epstein slaying by jumping off a plinth into a full split. In the end, though, Grousbeck got the award for Hairiest Shoulders, Belichick won Miss Congeniality and Neely got Best Pep in Her Step, noting that "high heels aren't all that different from hockey skates."

However, the overall winner and ultimate drag diva was Henry, who clearly received help from his flawlessly chic wife, Linda. Accepting his crown and scepter, he wiped away a tear and said, "You sure know how to make a guy feel pretty."

TIME TO IMBIBE

I'M NOT SURE HOW BIG WE CAN put the disclaimer on our cover story, but here goes: DO NOT TRY THIS AT HOME. Sure, maybe with a friend, but definitely not by yourself. The feature story rounds up 24 new-ish drinks from 24 different companies/restaurants in the area. Forget about the alcohol content in the 5 pm-2 am range; it'd be more liquid than even Tom Brady consumes in a 24-hour period. But there's plenty you should try, from the Bully Boy gin specifically tailored to fit Lion's Tail's Safety Meeting cocktail on the cover to a juice made with hand-pressed almond milk. With tea, coffee, mocktails, beer, wine and more featured in the story, there really is something for everyone. And one drink we all should be consuming more of is Boston's award-winning tap water that's in the running for even more accolades this summer. And no—you don't have to wake up at 5 am to try it.

If there's one person who knows a lot about waking up early, however, it's radio co-host Kennedy Elsey who chats with Jonathan Soroff about her career highlights and her reliance on the cough button. Elsewhere in the issue, Lydia Santangelo rounds up some rainbow fashions you'll be seeing on streets this season, while Sarah Hagman gets a taste of the natural wine craze and catches up with a talented bar director who's setting up shop at UNI. So add a few more drinks to the list of sips you'll need to try. But remember: Don't try them all in one day.

GRAPE DEMAND

NATURAL WINES ARE MAKING A SPLASH

HOLLY RIKE

Out of the Bottle

Maybe you've heard it through the grapevine: Natural wines are in. There's a grape debate, from the exact definition to shelf life, but these passionate producers typically use biodynamic or organic farming and do little intervening in the cellar. That means skipping additives that conventional winemakers use to deliver consistency: loads of sulfites, more sugars and yeasts, plus gelatin, food coloring, egg whites and oak chips—none of which has to be listed on the bottle. (Yet another reason to hate labels.)

"You're letting the grapes sing their own song," according to Sara Markey, co-owner of 7-month-old Field & Vine, who set up her restaurant around the corner from where she met and worked with Andrew Brady at Bronwyn. Now the couple churns out dishes using locally sourced produce, dairy and meats with a minimal carbon footprint—a philosophy that extends to their wine program. Says Markey, "It just seemed like: If we're committing ourselves so much to food this way, how can we not be just as committed to the drinks that we pour?"

So, what can a natural wine drinker expect? "You're going to find flavors that you aren't necessarily used to," Markey explains, though she insists you could dive into a natural wine and never know that's what you're drinking. Americans are accustomed to big, bold, upfront notes, and—with words like funky and barnyard swirling around the natural wine world—you might come across beer-like brettanomyces or "mousiness" when you first uncork a bottle. "That might be off-putting to some people," Markey admits. "But if you know what you're signing yourself up for, that can be really exciting." And there can also be some inconsistencies from bottle to bottle—though detecting those nuances can be part of the fun: "I think people who understand that process are almost just as excited about that because it's alive. You're seeing how the grape has transformed."

Markey says the most fun aspect, however, is falling in love with the vintners' backgrounds, from the Loire Valley's Jean-Pierre Robinot, who listens for symphonies in his barrels of chenin blanc and pineau d'aunis, to Frank Cornelissen, whose vineyard sits atop Mount Etna. Like New York chef-turned-rapper and natural wine enthusiast Action Bronson, Markey's a fan of Cornelissen's Contadino. "It's just so good. It's floral and it's mineral-driven and there's so much to think about and go back to with each sip." Field & Vine guests agree—a few who got a taste came back the same week for more.

And those oenophiles are on to something; with small-batch production comes higher turnover on the wine list. Field & Vine blew through two cases of Boaz from Evan Lewandowski, who harvests grapes in California and drives them back to his Utah home. "Now we're just waiting for the next vintage to come out. Once you get down to just a few bottles, I start to feel like maybe I should take it off the list and just keep it for us," Markey jokes. So, you might want to get your hands on the limited-edition prizes while you can. Bring your thirst—and an open mind. / Sarah Hagman

NATURAL SELECTION

Follow your nose to these restaurants stocked with natural wines for picks from the pros themselves.

FORLORN HOPE DRAGONE RAMATO 2016
Made of pinot gris fermented on the skins, this tangy, floral bottle ($55) is listed as an orange wine at Tasting Counter. It's made at a Sierra Foothills ranch by Matthew Rorick, who beverage director Justin Spaller considers one of the most exciting natural winemakers in California.

ROLAND PIGNARD MORGON 2015
This husband-and-wife team has overseen the same 11 acres since 1977, plowing the vineyards by horse and harvesting the grapes by hand. Café G chef Peter Crowley loves this 100-percent gamay Beaujolais ($14, glass) for its "wild character" that can stand up to roasts or richer meat dishes.

TOGNI REBAIOLI MARTINA ROSATO 2015
At Enrico Togni's Lombardian vineyard, sheep graze for weeds among erbanno, a nearly extinct grape that's used for this rosé ($15, glass; $50, bottle), which Babbo sommelier Luis Betancur says has finishing notes of pomegranate and raspberry.

DOMAINE DU PECH LE PECH ABUSÉ 2009
Hailing from little-known French appellation Buzet, this blend of merlot, cabernet sauvignon and cabernet franc is released as it's ready—2009 is the current vintage. Puritan & Company wine director Peter Nelson says this bottle ($65) has turned the most die-hard cabernet fans into natural wine believers.

A BACKYARD BARBECUE SPOT FIRES UP SOUTHIE

Backyard Betty's
170 W. Braadway, Boston
backyardbettys.cam

IT ALL BEGAN WITH A BARBECUE. Restaurateurs and co-owners of Publico Street Bistro & Garden—husband-and-wife duo Jairo Dominguez and Teodora Bakardzhieva and business partner and friend Theo Bougas—started a tradition of throwing cookouts every Marathon Monday for their family and friends. Now, nearly three decades later, the trio is inviting the rest of Boston to join the party as they prepare to open Backyard Betty's in Southie this April.

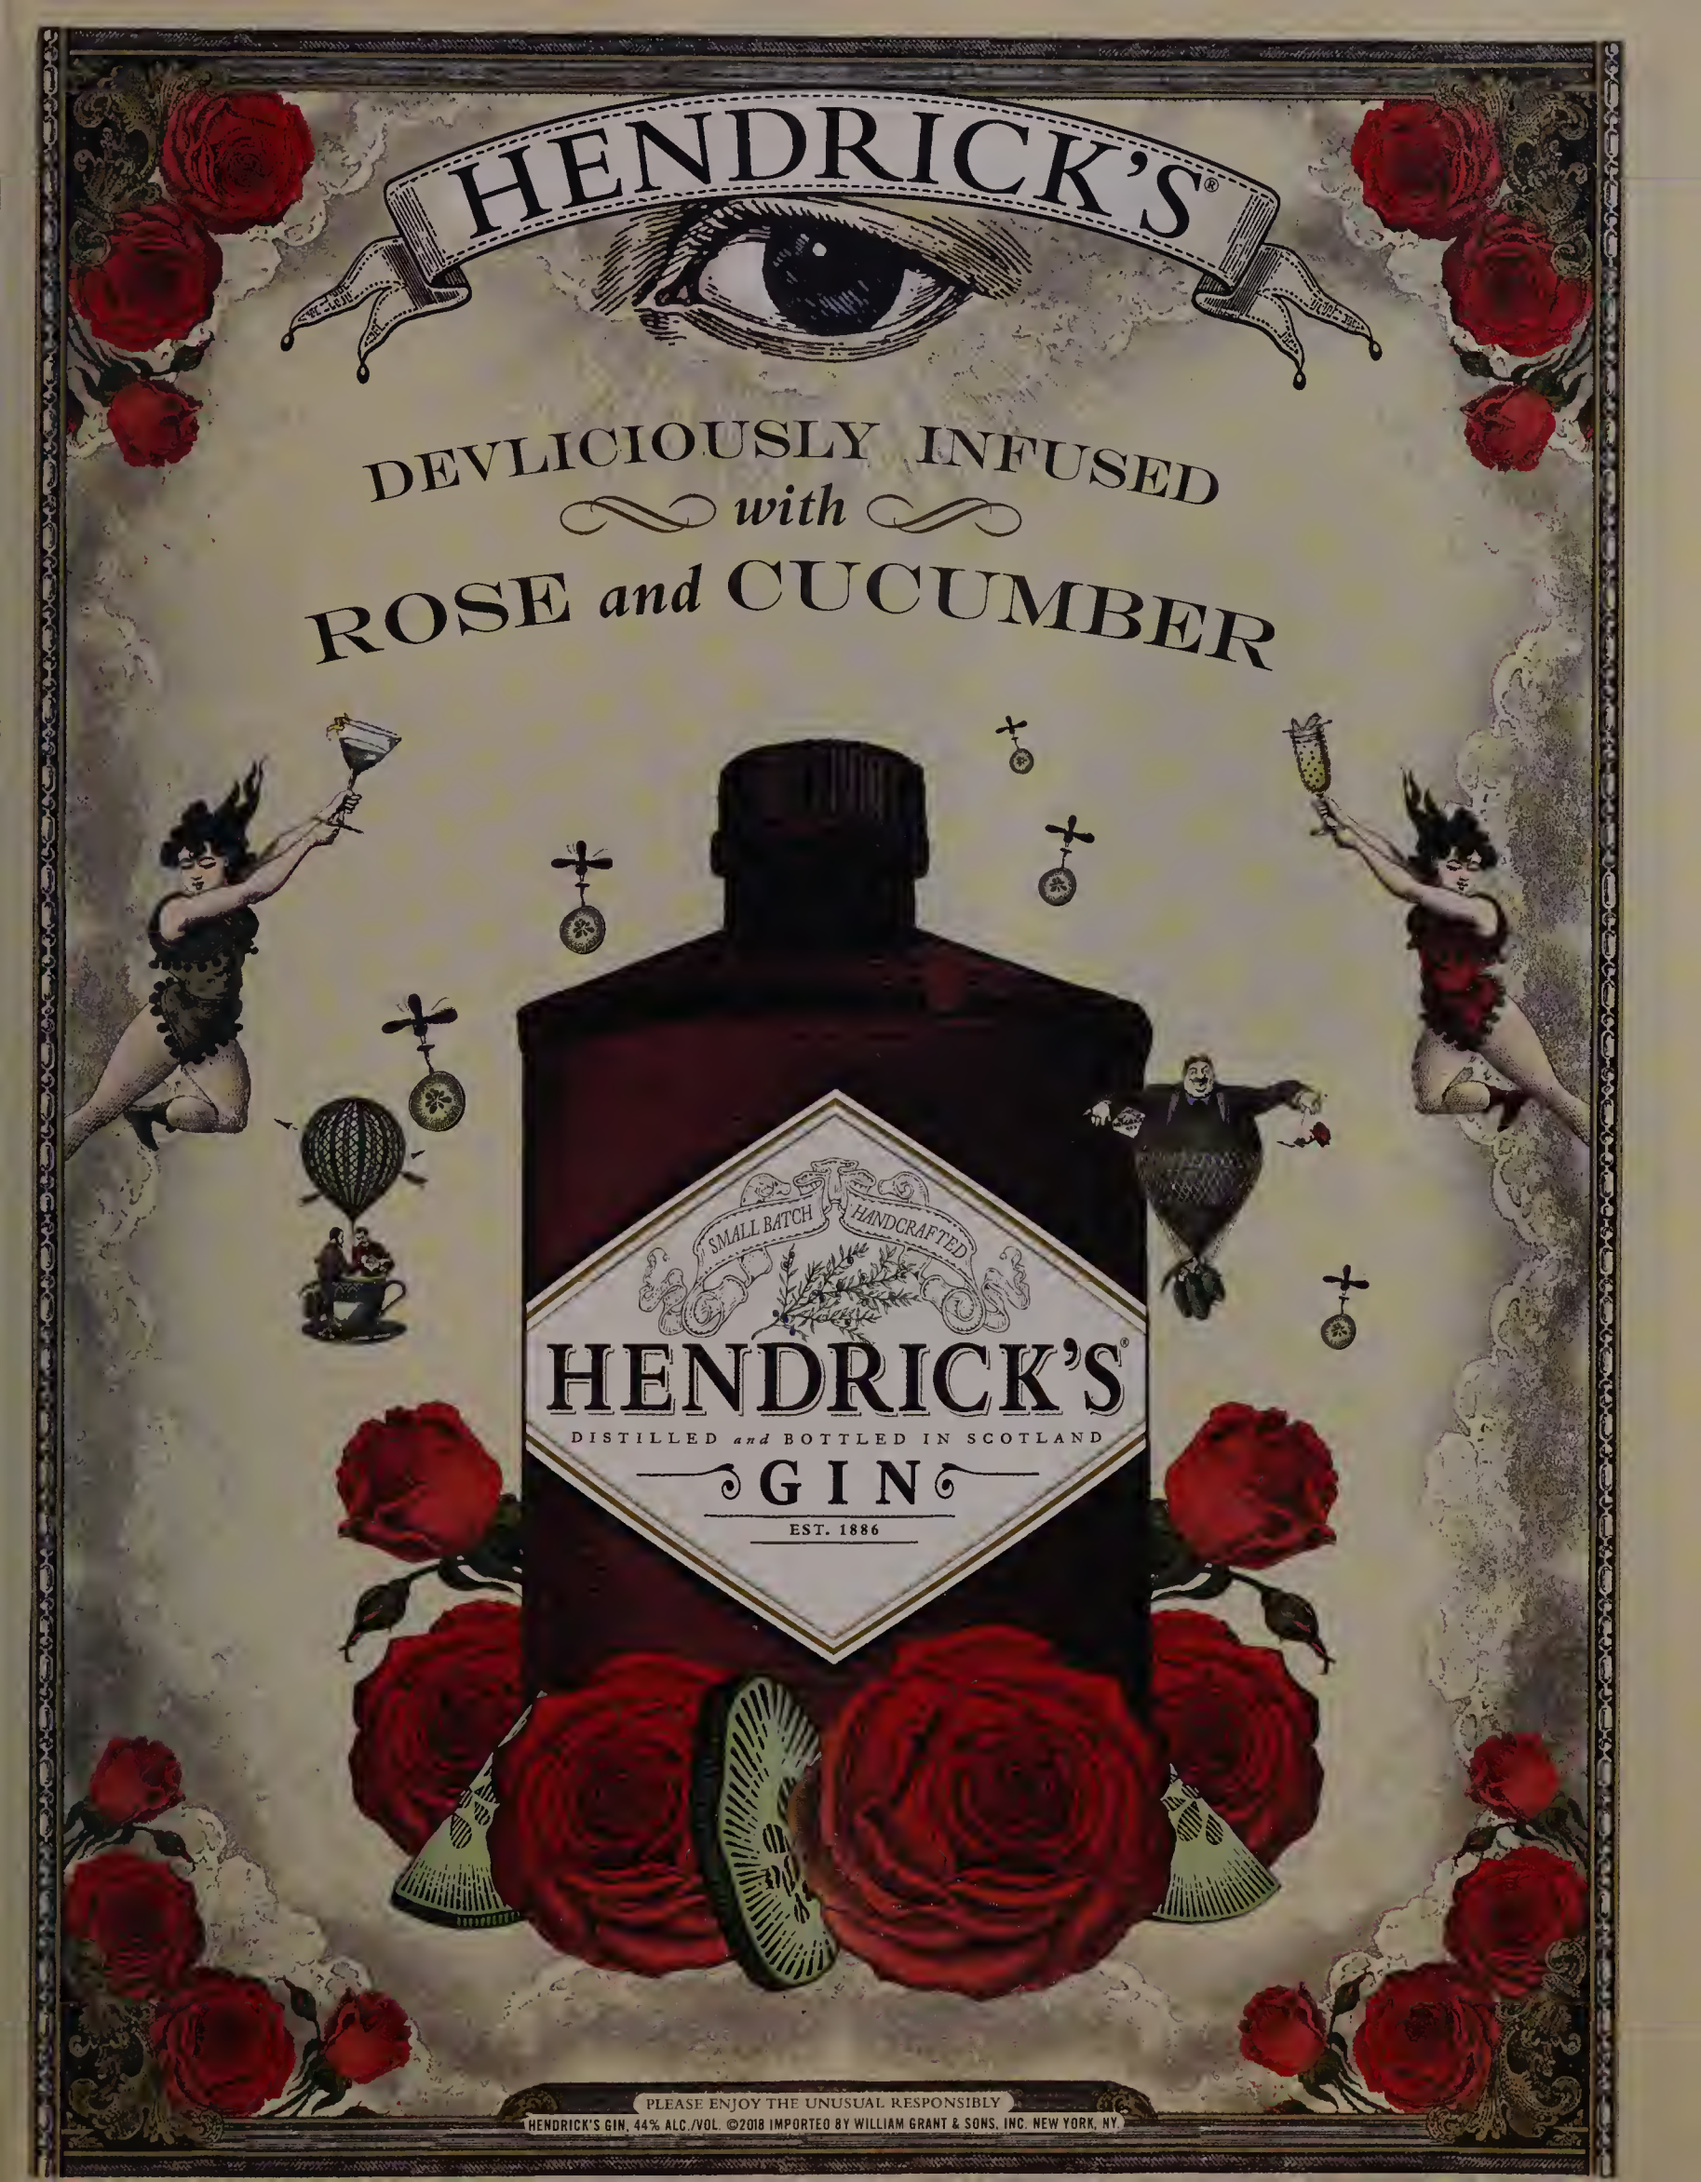
"It all started at my house back in the early '90s," Bougas explains. "We used to do cookouts that just kind of grew and grew—always with people in the industry. And it was always talked about how this would be a great concept as a restaurant."

Backyard Betty's will serve comfort fare for dinner seven nights a week, with plans to expand to brunch on the weekends. The menu from chef Jeff Howe (Teatro) will include traditional apps and entrees, like snapper with grilled squash, zucchini, red onion, asparagus and quinoa, with additional offerings of grilled pizzas and communal plates for larger groups. There will also be a special section of the menu dubbed "From the Ashes," featuring veggies, slow-roasted chicken, brisket and heritage ribs. The bar program will showcase craft beers, classic American cocktails and modern additions such as the Castle Island Punch made with rum, cognac, peach brandy, lemon and green tea oleo saccharum, as well as boozy milkshakes like the Rainbow Unicorn, a mix of colorful sherbet, vanilla ice cream, passion fruit and vodka.

As for what guests can expect, Bakardzhieva says they want the spot—with seating for about 100 and an additional 32 seats between two bars—to feel like home: "A lot of Bostonians don't have a backyard—or even a deck! So here it is. You can come and enjoy the communal food and you don't have to do the cooking."

The trio took inspiration from early Americana while designing the restaurant. The main bar will be covered in metal from an Airstream, walls are adorned with '70s memorabilia and a custom-built wood-burning grill straight from Mesquite, Texas, anchors the main dining room. The second bar—designed to look like an old auto garage—sits in the back of the space, which also features a suspended motorcycle and a garage door that will open to the sidewalk when the weather warms up.

Says Bougas: "We'll be your indoor tailgate in the winter and your outdoor barbecue in the summer."



Good Eats: Get Toasted

Thanks to a new seasonal menu, the Friendly Toast is serving some Santorini vibes with its Freak Out With Your Greek Out avocado toast. "We decided to go Greek-style for spring," says co-owner Eric Goodwin. "The dish features housemade olive garlic tapenade and tahini sauce on our homemade wheat toast." Two thick slices are loaded with avocado, one topped with tapenade, cucumber, tomato and a hot honey sauce, while the other features feta, tahini sauce, baby spinach and a sunny side up egg. Served with fruit salad, the dish is a mix of salty and creamy flavors that will have you sailing to warmer shores. / Nathan Tavares

CARBO LOAD: Michael Carbonaro brings his tricks to the Wilbur.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

As the magician and entertainer behind truTV's The Corbonoro Effect, Michael Carbonaro dazzles unsuspecting victims of his hidden-camera prank show with illusions that are light-years beyond pulling a rabbit out of a hat. The self-described "performance bizarrist" had us spellbound before the curtain call of his live show at the Wilbur on April 14. / Nothan Tovores

HOW DO YOU COME UP WITH THE IDEAS FOR YOUR ILLUSIONS? Sometimes, I'll be driving along and I'll look out the road and see like a bunch of construction guys working on a manhole. And I like the way it looks. I'll take a picture and I'll be like, "OK, what can we do here? What's happening? There's a manhole. What if suddenly there wasn't a manhole? Well all right, what if there was a man who went down the manhole and suddenly there was no manhole?" So you just start to build a trick around something that excites you. That's one way. Another way—maybe the less popular way—is you kind of have a secret and you go off that. You discover "Gosh, isn't it amazing if I can configure this in a certain way so that it looks like this disappeared?" And then you build off of that. But that's the more rare one. Usually, when you're trying to solve a story, a secret you might know will pop into play.

WHAT'S THE BIGGEST DIFFERENCE BETWEEN YOUR TV SHOW AND LIVE PERFORMANCES? We do amazing things on the TV show, but there is just nothing like getting to meet the fans and performing magic live, right in front of their faces. ...You know, even the biggest fans of The Corbonoro Effect secretly wonder if the stuff we do is accomplished by camera tricks. They think, "If I was really there, would that happen?" So they come on down to the theater. And you should see their faces light up when something amazing happens. There's this one part of the show when something just appears out-of-the-plain-blue nowhere. If you could see it from my side—the faces of the crowd—they're like, "Oh my gosh." You can really feel it. Like, we're all really here in this moment and this magic is really happening. It's pretty electric.

PEOPLE DISPLAY A RANGE OF REACTIONS TO YOUR MAGIC TRICKS, FROM LAUGHTER TO FEAR. WHICH REACTIONS DO YOU MOST LIKE? Same with the TV show, the stage show goes back and forth from being playful and goofy to being maybe a little scary, a little mysterious. And my favorite kind of those reactions is really that underneath it is some sort of delighted wonder. Someone can be afraid, but they also can be enchanted enough to not want to leave the room. And that becomes the challenge.

Drink of the Moment
FOG OVER OSAKA

PRICE: $14

INGREDIENTS: Suntory Whisky Toki, Citadelle gin, pineapple juice, lime juice, orgeat, Pedro Ximenez sherry

BACKGROUND: When looking through classic Tiki recipes, UNI's new bar director Vikram Hegde—a Little Donkey vet who's now overseeing the programs at the Central Square spot as well as Coppa and Toro—came across the sherry-topped Fog Cutter. "I was like, 'Wait a minute—sherry is for nerds like me. You don't drink sherry at the Hong Kong.' " Hegde tapped into UNI's extensive Japanese whisky selection to replace the cocktail's usual rum and brandy, opting for a lighter style with notes like honeysuckle and coconut.

UNI
370A Comm. Ave., Boston (617-536-7200)
uni-boston.com

TIKI TIME: As he rolls out a new tropical-tinged menu, Hegde says he's trying to reflect the food menu's modern take on traditional dishes. "You have these old standbys—nobody remembers what's in a Suffering Bastard, but they probably had one when they went to Kowloon years ago. We're trying to harken back to those memories while still creating balanced, advanced cocktails." In addition to island-inspired originals, look out for a twist on a Singapore Sling—one of the few gin-based Tiki tipples you'll find—and a toned down Navy Grog that you can handle for two or three rounds.

THE ICE IS RIGHT: UNI's now one of a handful of places in the country where you can sip on Thai jelly beers ($8). Sapporo bottles sit in a freezing mixture of ice and salt inside a wooden barrel—called a bai wun—that rocks for 15 minutes to dissolve the carbon dioxide. When the beer's finally cracked open, the liquid instantly turns into a slushy, refreshing sip. / Soroh Hogmon

LOOKING BACK

WHAT IS THE HIGHLIGHT OF YOUR CAREER? I am most proud of establishing Dance for World Community. Now in its 10th year, we have brought more cohesion and visibility to a broader dance community and created a model for repositioning the role of dance to build stronger, more inclusive local communities.

HOW HAS DANCE IN BOSTON EVOLVED IN YOUR TIME? A review in The Boston Globe about our company's debut referred to Boston as a city that was traditionally "inhospitable to dance." I have since spent a lot of years developing local audiences—no touring, no sights on national or international notoriety—just focused on Boston and its need for better dance. Thirty years later, I believe we've had an impact. Through Dance for World Community, I have met many people who are committed to their work and to strengthening the dance scene in Boston and I continue to be optimistic.

LOOKING AHEAD

WHAT ARE YOU MOST EXCITED ABOUT FOR THE DORCHESTER SCHOOL? I have spent more than three decades working to diversify ballet training and performance, but in spite of all the recent publicity about changes in a traditionally exclusionary culture, progress is still unacceptably slow. The Dorchester school will open many new opportunities in achievement-based training that will benefit many who have historically been left out.

WHERE DO YOU SEE DANCE IN BOSTON GOING IN THE FUTURE? When you look at the breadth of dance in Boston, from its most traditional and enduring model in the Boston Ballet to the array of new dance that is sprouting in the most unsuspecting corners of our community, you have to be hopeful. It doesn't hurt that new technologies are widely spreading millions of images to educate us about dance around the world. My hope is that Boston will learn from these but rely on its local talent and support. After all, nothing beats live dance.

Three for the Road...

If you're running from Hopkinton to Copley Square on April 16, there are more than a few marathon massages, pasta dinners and stylish sneakers you can try. We rounded up a few items and an event that might catch the eye of marathoners and infrequent sprinters alike. / Matt Martinelli

Running singlet, $45

You'll have to rush to the recently renovated New Balance experience store on Boylston Street if you want any of the five types of limited-edition singlets, each emblazoned with a Boston neighborhood like Brighton, Beacon Hill or Southie. There's only 42 of each style, matching the number of kilometers in a marathon. But don't fret if you miss out—you can always buy a T-shirt version of the design.

Socks, $16

Local sock company Neon Bandits teamed up with Heartbreak Hill Running Co. earlier this year to launch four styles of Boston Marathon–themed socks. The performance running sock took eight months to design and includes one pair that has a map of the Hopkinton starting line on one sock and the Boston finish line on the other.

Pre-marathon stretch, Free

Fitness app Zeamo hosts an hourlong pre-marathon stretch on April 15 at 10 am, led by Equinox trainer and marathoner Alli Felsenthal. The outdoor event takes place near the Newton Marriott's gazebo and includes tips on proper stretching techniques and other ways to prevent injury for all runners. Bonus: There'll be plenty of fitness-related treats and giveaways.

While food and shopping can be pricey, London's a culture glutton's dream. Entrance to most major museums is free, and tickets to most plays in the West End, as well as a variety of other performances, are a fraction of the cost of Broadway or even Boston.

LONDON CALLING

TAKE A TOUR OF THE FAMED CITY'S NEIGHBORHOODS

To the unfamiliar, London can feel overwhelming—a monolithic and somewhat monotonous metropolis of seemingly endless white Georgian squares, rows of mews houses and a maze of streets that seems to follow no discernible pattern.

Like all major cities, though, it's better understood as a vast collection of neighborhoods, and one way to experience them is by staying at the three London properties owned by the Doyle Collection—a Dublin-based chain of luxury boutique hotels.

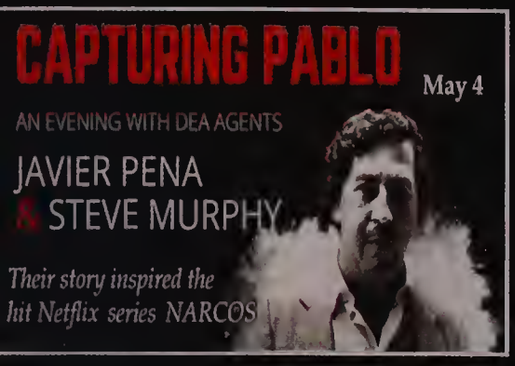
For the museum buff, the Kensington Hotel is an ideal base, housed inside one of the aforementioned ubiquitous white Georgian mansions. It's opulent yet comfortable, like staying as a guest in the home of some chic, young, unimaginably rich couple. The rooms are large and lavishly appointed with mohair-upholstered furniture and deep claw-footed tubs that you have to hold onto the sides of to avoid drowning, and the bar is a superb place to hide from inclement weather.

Just off the Old Brompton Road in South Kensington, it's within comfortable walking distance of Exhibition Road, where you'll find the Victoria and Albert Museum and its hodgepodge of collections, the Natural History Museum—which houses Charles Darwin's life work—and the wonderfully interactive Science Museum. The Royal Geographical Society, Kensington Palace and the Design Museum are also nearby, and just a short tube ride away are the shopping meccas of Knightsbridge—Harvey Nichols, Harrod's and Sloane Street.

While the Doyle Collection delivers luxe experiences across the board, it's surprising that the properties all have the same designer: a daughter of the company's founder who is enigmatically referred to as Mrs. Gallagher. The vibe couldn't be more different between the Kensington and the Marylebone, located in the heart of the W1 postcode neighborhood. Housed in a late-20th-century building, it has a much more contemporary feel, with strong art deco elements, sleek and expansive common areas and a folding wet bar straight out of a James Bond movie. The superb 108 Brasserie is a popular neighborhood hangout that makes its own gin, while the penthouse suites boast something virtually unheard of in London hotel rooms: large outdoor entertaining spaces.

The hotel is spitting distance from the boutiques and galleries of Mayfair and the swarming retail scene of Oxford Street, where Mr. Selfridge fans can get lost in the vastness of his eponymous department store. Rambling through the quieter and less commercial shops on or near Marylebone High Street rewards visitors with out-of-the way cafes, chic wine bars, specialty shops and stores selling the work of emerging designers. One of London's most vastly overlooked and underrated museums, the Wallace Collection is a mere 4-minute walk, while the decidedly kitschier but still entertaining Madame Tussauds and Sherlock Holmes Museums are less than 15 minutes by foot.

More high-minded literary pilgrims will want to pay homage to Virginia Woolf and the Bloomsbury Set with a stay at the Doyle's third London property. The Bloomsbury is the most architecturally important of the three, built into the landmark 1928 YWCA building designed by Britain's leading early-20th-century architect, Sir Edwin Lutyens. Having recently undergone a multimillion dollar facelift, the building on Great Russell Street is also the most charming and whimsical of the set. The Dalloway Terrace, with its seasonal tea service, is a welcome riot of color, while the Club Bar is a sophisticated, subterranean pub, and the cozy Living Room features a Lutyens-designed fireplace, important portraits of Woolf and her circle and wallpaper that beautifully recalls the Arts and Crafts movement. However, the undeniable design highlight is the Coral Room, a high-gloss, high-glamour, two-story lounge with walls painted a delicately precise shade somewhere between orange and pink. A collaboration with the white-hot Martin Brudnizki Design Studio, the stunningly dramatic room has custom Murano chandeliers and original artwork by English illustrator Luke Edward Hall, and it's worth stopping by for a drink, regardless of where you're staying.



The Bloomsbury neighborhood is characterized by large garden squares surrounded by elegant homes, treasures like the British Museum—which, contrary to whatever "A Foggy Day" says, has never lost its charm—and points of interest to history buffs, such as the homes of Charles Dickens and Benjamin Disraeli. It's also incredibly easy to escape to Soho and the West End—ideal for theater lovers who want to be somewhat removed from the fray.

The 18th-century literary giant Samuel Johnson was wrong in saying, "When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life." London can be exhausting, even when you skip the more touristy spots like Buckingham Palace, Whitehall and the Tower of London. But when you explore it one neighborhood at a time, it reveals itself as the collection of unique villages it grew out of—and as the unequaled world capital that it is. ◆

BONS TEMPS ROULER

BOOTLEG SPECIAL BRINGS THE BLAZING SEAFOOD-BOIL TREND TO THE SOUTH END

KEEPING ABREAST OF BOSTON restaurant fads can be a full-time job. Maybe you missed Brothers Crawfish in Dorchester, which debuted eight years ago as the area's first Vietnamese-Cajun seafood boil restaurant. But the string of similar openings in the past two years (including Holly Crab, Loui Loui and Shaking Crab) is harder to ignore. Inevitably, someone had to take this idea, glam it up a bit and drop it into one of our higher-rent neighborhoods. Thus arrives Bootleg Special to a South End space that is quite chic by the modest standards of its category, offering a fun, messy style of dining with vivid Cajun and Creole flavors—but only an occasional Southeast Asian accent.

The heart of the menu is the seafood boil, a small mountain of shellfish (some combination of shrimp, clams, mussels, crawfish, lobster and Alaskan king crab legs) boiled in savory broth and then spicily sauced and bulked out with starches (corn on the cob, potatoes, pasta and/or rice) and a few slices of andouille. At humbler joints, these goodies are presented in a plastic bag; here you get a porcelain serving bowl. But the eating is the same: You get to hand-crack, peel, extract and suck your way through a dripping pile of bivalves and crustaceans.

We first went with the Bootleg Special boil ($79), a 1.25-pound lobster and a half-pound each of shrimp, crawfish, mussels and clams, plus corn, spuds and sausage. The three sauce options include Bootleg (boasting a garlicky, pretty ferociously chili-hot Cajun spice blend, and the most interesting of the bunch), Moonshine (a gentler white wine and shallot mix) and coconut-curry/basil (rather like a Thai yellow curry). Touted as serving two to three, I'd call this a meal for four with an app or two. It's fun eating, though the crawfish are so small that laborious cracking yields only a wee bite of meat and head juices; I'll skip these in the future until they source larger specimens. You can also customize a bowl with up to three seafoods ($16-$21/pound, market prices for lobster and king crab legs) plus andouille and starches ($4-$6).

If plastic-bib-worthy dining isn't your thing, there are plenty of Louisiana-inflected smaller plates: ribs on Coke ($12), crisp and fatty baby backs in a syrupy cola glaze; nicely fiery and crisp Bootleg Special chicken wings ($12); two generous ears of Mexican-style easy street corn ($10), helpfully sliced into smaller wheels; a big skillet of garlicky Brussels sprouts and cauliflower ($8); a mild version of seafood étouffée ($16) with clams, mussels and shrimp in a Creole-trinity (onions, celery, bell pepper) sauce on white rice; garlic noodles ($8) with a neatly fiery-sweet-garlicky sauce; and the #12 GOAT salad ($8), which rises not to Brady-esque heights but is a respectable mesclun/goat cheese salad dotted with candied pecans and roasted beets, carrots and parsnips. We also sampled oysters ($20/six) from the short raw bar menu with good mignonette and mild pineapple/habanero salsa—though knowing the specific provenance of the Martha's Vineyard oysters would be helpful. There are also simple, generous po'boys ($16) consisting of a good sub roll, some slaw and a pile of skillfully deep-fried oysters, catfish, shrimp or clams drizzled with chipotle aioli, plus a hefty side of excellent shoestring fries.

Desserts include a heap of large-ish, steaming, fluffy beignets ($7) that can be gussied up further with ice cream and syrupy toppings, as in the boozy bananas Foster ($11), which compensated for lack of tableside flambéing with a staggering portion size. Your inner sugar freak will also respond giddily to a vanilla ice cream/Abita root beer float ($8).

The beer list features six drafts ($7-$9/pint, $28-$36/pitcher) and 21 packaged options ($4-$10) running the gamut from geeky micros to grandpa's lawnmower pilsners. The 26-deep wine list is serviceable and decently priced ($9-$15/glass, $30-$90/bottle, most under $40), though cocktails suffer a bit from the limitations of a cordial license. For example, the Sazerac ($12) is made with sugary apple whiskey instead of rye or cognac, and the Bootleg Hurricane ($12) relies on artificial-tasting flavored rums and pomegranate liqueur instead of straight rums and fruit juices for its tropical oomph. It helps to prefer sweeter drinks here.
